BRITAIN DAZED BY RED MENACE

Premier Mac Donald Faces Bitter Confidence Fight

LONDON, Oct. 25.—The bombshell of the Zinoviev affair has shattered existing lines in the British election campaign and reverberations of the explosion were heard wherever political speeches were made today.

Well informed conservative and liberal spokesmen estimated that the disclosures made in the government's note to Moscow yesterday will cost labor between 20 and 100 seats at the polls next week.

Conservatives are confident the affair means tens of thousands more votes than had been expected, and a clear majority for a conservative government in commons.

Liberals believe the sensation will send enough votes their way to make the party of Lloyd George and Asquith the official opposition ahead of labor.

Prime Minister Mac Donald and his colleagues hoped the "bombshell" had started at last minute landslide of votes for labor, by showing at the climax of the campaign that the campaign is not Bolshevik, and that its honesty and frankness entitled it to votes.

The rank and file of labor was bewildered tonight, however, by the statement of cabinet members, including Home Secretary and Chieftain, admitting the Zinoviev letter may be a forgery, this, appeared in direct contradiction of the attitude of Prime Minister Mac Donald who made the document the subject of official protest to Moscow yesterday.

Wheeler Dares Mellon To Name Income Tax

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 25.—Challenging Secretary of the Treasury Mellon to make public his own income tax and those of all six candidates for the presidency and vice presidency, Senator Barton K. Wheeler today invaded Illinois for a four-day campaign.

Wheeler, in a statement, charged Mellon released only a few of the income tax returns Thursday, "including the $84,000 tax paid by John W. Davis, Coolidge's opponent," before further releases were stopped by warnings to publishers that they printed them at their own risk.

EGG IS HURLED AT DALRYMPLE

500 Hear Hot Political Talk On Austin Ave.

SAYS KLAN IS DEAD

Terms Leaders 'Buzzards,' Libertines and Thieves

Scathing attack of a Port Arthur minister, a rotten egg hurled from behind a hamburger stand on Austin avenue, hitting a spectator standing near the truck, and the hottest political speech and loudest cheering heard in many political meetings in Port Arthur characterized the rally in Austin avenue Saturday night when Major A. V. Dalrymple, of Fort Worth, spoke in the interest of "Ma" Ferguson, democratic nominee for governor of Texas.

"Any man who attempts to say Jim Ferguson stole $250,000 is a bald faced liar, and ministers who prostitute the gospel and make statements like that, I'm going to tell them the truth and make them like it," Dalrymple hurled to the throng of over 500 men and women, after reading a section from a letter signed by Rev. J. F. Dobb, which was printed in The News Friday under the caption "Letters to the Editor."

Coming back to the letter later in his speech, Dalrymple declared: "He's a liar when he says 'Ma' Ferguson hasn't a platform. She's got a wham of a platform."

From the outskirts of the crowd a spectator called out, "Dr. Butte didn't get any money from the brewers."

"No, but he got it from you Kluckers, and that's a — sight worse," Dalrymple flung back.

Dalrymple declared the "degenerate republicans of Texas, the political preachers and the hooded leaders of the Klan are united to deliver the country to bolshevism by destroying the fundamentals of democracy."

"I don't see how any man can be a republican and a Christian, and no man can be a Christian without being a democrat," Dalrymple said.

"I came — near being a minister myself, but I saved myself in time, and I tell you, a political preacher is a stench in the nostrils of Almighty God," the speaker said.

Pledge Compared to Nuptial Vow

Directly addressing "you kluckers," Dalrymple said, "if you had any decency, you wouldn't associate with a democrat."

18 Homes In Dayton Are Wrecked

DAYTON, Oct. 25.—A mysterious blast which wrecked 18 houses in the southeastern end of Dayton tonight and damaged 50 other homes in the vicinity, is being probed by police and county authorities.

It is claimed two men were seen to approach a contractors' shed where the blast occurred, a short time before gasoline and dynamite stored there exploded.

Police and private ambulances were rushed to the scene and the entire Dayton fire department was called out. Six persons are said to be slightly injured.

REFINERY WORKERS PLAN OYSTER DINNER

A chicken and oyster supper is being planned for sometime in November by the Refinery Workers Local No. 28. A committee was appointed at the meeting Thursday night to make plans for arranging details.

CIVIC BACKING FOR AIR ROUTE

Is Needed to Put Project Over, Claim

Civic backing for the routing of proposed air mail routes through Port Arthur on the southern transcontinental route now being worked out, is essential if this city is to be included on the air mail line.

The word given by S. I. Dunn, postmaster, to Col. C. H. Fitz Gerald, head of the Port Arthur Reserve Officers' association; Elgin H. Blalock, assistant secretary of the association, and F. S. Owen, local aviator, at a conference with the postmaster Saturday, they said.

Postmaster Dunn assured the committee that he would use all of his influence to bring Port Arthur on the transcontinental air mail routes, but united effort from civic organizations is needed to back up the proposition with the second assistant postmaster general, general division of air mail service.

Port Arthur is on the most direct line from New Orleans to Ellington field, near Houston, and this fact was noted by Col. C. C. Culver, commanding the Eighth Corps Area, U. S. army aviation service, and will be included on army air service maps.

F. S. Owen said, Col. Culver also requested photographs of the landing field here, at Bland's Bend, and surrounding territory.

WOMAN HELD FOR SLAYING IN 1923

CHICAGO, Oct. 25.—Mrs. Gladys Nachtsheim, 20, St. Paul, Minn., was arrested here today as the woman "with the Mona Lisa smile" who shot and killed Richard C. Tesmer, wealthy Chicago insurance man, in May, 1923, during a holdup.

An anonymous letter received yesterday at the detective bureau named the St. Paul woman and her husband Paul Nachtsheim, 24, alleged deserter from Port Snelling, Minn., who is being held at Fort Sheridan, Ill.

H. C. Wallace, Secretary Of Agriculture, Dies Suddenly

Grandfather, 84, Parent of 17, Elopes With Grandchild, 14

CINCINNATI, Oct. 25.—Police of Southern Ohio and Northern Kentucky tonight were asked to search for A. C. Campbell, 84, who is said to have eloped with his 14-year-old granddaughter, Catherine Walling, of Long Run, Ky.

Campbell, father of 17 children by two former marriages, according to his daughter, Mrs. Millie Walling, mother of Catherine, "fell madly in love with the little girl and insisted that he be permitted to marry her."

"Father was visiting us and we noticed he was paying attention to Catherine," Mrs. Walling told police, "but we did not think anything of it until he asked Mr. Walling to consent to their marriage."

Walling laughed at him, but when he found the older man was in earnest, he locked his daughter in her room. She contrived to get away and the two have disappeared.

ONE WOMAN HELD IN QUIZ

Two Sons Not Yet Told Stokes Is Dying

Avenge hands of the entire law enforcing personnel of Jefferson county reached out Saturday and gathered in five, four men and a woman, in an effort to locate the one who fired from ambush Friday night and mortally wounded R. C. Stokes.

Stokes is in a dying condition at Hotel Dieu in Beaumont where he was carried after being shot down at the home of his friend, Deputy Sheriff Artie Pollock, Friday night, while with others he was enjoying a radio party.

All Held Are White

On the almost undisputed theory that the bullet, received by Stokes, was intended for Pollock, officers at once began to seek solution of the mystery from this angle.

One of the four men sifted in by the dragnet set by county and city officers Saturday is said by officers to be one against whom Pollock has secured much evidence in several whisky cases now pending.

The woman is not under suspicion by officers but is believed to be able to give light on the whereabouts of several of the men held.

Clots Fill Injured Lung

X-ray examination was made Saturday of Stokes's wound. Blood clots were found to be filling the left lung pneumonia is almost certain to develop, physicians said.

Stokes, as an employee of the Magnolia company, was on a job at which his two predecessors met with violent deaths at the plant, it was learned Saturday.

The two young sons of the wounded man, ages 6 and 8, have not been told of their father's condition. Mrs. Stokes is at the bedside of her husband, and when he received his wound, "though nearly prostrated with grief, she keeps a silent vigil by her wounded mate and refuses to leave him."

Scores of friends of the wounded man, including officials of the Magnolia company, called Saturday at the hospital to inquire of his condition and leave floral offerings.

BELL DINED

Official Inspects Knights Templar Here

Annual inspection of Port Arthur commanders of Knights Templar No. 73 was completed Saturday by William G. Bell of Austin, deputy grand commander of grand commandery of Texas, a dinner being given in his honor last night at the Newport by all officers and past commanders of the local order.

Friday night the deputy grand commander inspected the commandery and addressed it in session. Saturday he was conducted on a sightseeing tour over the city, and to the refinery. Following the dinner at the Newport the inspection continued from 7:30 until 11:30 Friday evening.

Woman Political Leader Asserts Stand

AUSTIN, Oct. 25.—Mrs. Linna Cunningham, vice president of the National League of Women Voters and chairman of the national get-out-the-vote campaign, in a statement given out here today, announced that she is supporting Dr. George C. Butte, republican candidate for governor, and will cast her vote for him on November 4.

Mrs. Cunningham took a prominent part in the fight for women's suffrage.

"With all my heart I believe that any use of a citizen's vote to put into office candidates who will not recognize public office as a public trust is as truly a betrayal of one's state and nation as any form of treason which can be devised, and in the end is a great and more insidious danger to our form of government than those more open and therefore more easily combatted dangers of which we often hear," said Mrs. Cunningham.

HOME AGAIN

Shenandoah Docks at Lakehurst, N. J.

LAKEHURST, N. J., Oct. 25.—The giant naval dirigible Shenandoah, back from its trip to the Pacific coast, during which it traveled approximately 10,000 miles, was placed in its hangar at the naval air station here at 12:35 o'clock today. By 12:50 o'clock the doors of the great hangar were closed, the 300 men of the landing crew had given three cheers for the ship's crew and the latter, exhausted were hastening to their quarters to make up for lost sleep.

PHILIPPINE RIOTS QUELLED, SAYS WOOD

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—Order has been restored in the Philippine Islands following riots by Filipinos against Chinese, according to a cable report received today by the war department from Governor General Wood in Manila.

The origin of the demonstration which threatened to become serious was an "irresponsible" report in a Filipino paper that eighty Filipinos had been killed in Shanghai and that the Chinese cooks and storekeepers in Manila were poisoning food, Wood said.

HE KNEW LAW ON GATS, BUT NOT ON 'KNUCKS'

His name was Dennis and hard luck followed in his wake. Dennis Washington, negro, was picked up by police officers Saturday afternoon with a pair of knucks in his possession, officers said.

END IS PEACEFUL

Funeral to Be Held In White House Monday

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—Secretary of Agriculture Henry C. Wallace died at the Navy hospital here at 4 p. m. today from complications ensuing from an operation performed October 14 for the removal of his appendix and gall bladder.

Death came peacefully after Wallace had been unconscious for nearly 24 hours. Mrs. Wallace and daughter, Ruth, were present when the end came.

Coolidge Expresses Sorrow

The official bulletin issued by Dr. Joel T. Boone, White House physician who attended him, read as follows:

"Secretary Wallace died at 4 p. m. He slept away very quietly. Mrs. Wallace and daughter, Ruth, were present. The immediate cause of death was bacteremia with chylitis (inflammation of the gall bladder) contributory."

President and Mrs. Coolidge went to the Wallace apartments immediately upon receipt of word of Wallace's death and left words of condolence. Mrs. Wallace was unable to see them.

Interment in Des Moines, Ia.

Funeral services for Wallace will be held in the east room of the White House at 11 a. m. Monday. The body will leave here at 8 p. m. Monday for Des Moines, where interment will take place. Mrs. Wallace and relatives who are expected here for the funeral accompanying it.

President and Mrs. Coolidge, cabinet officers and high army and navy officials will attend the services. Active pall bearers will be Wallace's associates at the department of agriculture. Dr. Wallace Radcliffe, pastor of the Presbyterian church, where the Wallaces attend here, will read the services.

MISSING

Mail Pilot Reported Lost at Frisco

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 25.—Burr H. Winslow, mail pilot, was reported missing tonight.

Winslow left Reno for San Francisco with transcontinental mail at 2:30 p. m. today and was due to land at Crissy Field here shortly after 5 p. m.

Conflicting reports of Winslow having been seen to the west of Sierra Nevada mountains reached mail officials tonight.

MOORE CASE IS REVERSED

Klan Issue Remands It to Court for Retrial

Special to The News.
BEAUMONT, Texas, Oct. 25.—Because Judge George C. O'Brien would not permit a juror to state whether or not he belonged to the Ku Klux Klan, the case of Guy Moore, charged with possession of intoxicating liquors, was reversed and remanded to the 58th district court for retrial today by the court of criminal appeals.

Three cases were returned to Jefferson county for retrial here on Saturday afternoon. In the Guy Moore case an attorney asked a juror about his Klan affiliations. The court would not permit the question to be answered but himself asked the general question:

"If any of you belong to any social order, the principles of which prevent you from rendering a fair and impartial verdict in this case or if you have taken any oath or obligation which would be in contravention of your oath as a juror in this case and if for any reason you would not or could not in your action as a juror in this case regard and be governed by your oath as a juror as superior to any other obligation, please speak out now and let it be known, for if such be the case, you are not a qualified juror." None of the jurors made affirmative reply.

The case of W. A. Labon, charged with sale of intoxicating liquor, was also returned as was that of William Fawcett, charged with the manufacture of liquor.

MAY NAME FEDERAL JURORS AT SHERMAN

BEAUMONT, Texas, Oct. 25.—Names of grand jurors for the November term of federal court will probably be selected during the coming week at Sherman, Texas. By law jurors may be selected at any time within four weeks of the opening date of federal court. The term will open on November 17.

In compliance with the statute providing that the jury commissioner and the district clerk must be of opposite political faith, C. B. Dorchester, jury commissioner of Sherman, and R. H. Blades, clerk, will draw names from the list sent to Sherman in the summer. A list of 300 men was sent to Sherman, and between 52 and 75 names will be drawn from the list. The only qualifications for a federal grand juror is that he must be of fair character, of approved integrity, sound judgment and reasonable information.

According to Horace Blades, clerk of the court here, the present grand jury will handle a very large number of cases placed before it for investigation.

Special to The News.
BEAUMONT, Texas, Oct. 25.—Judge George C. O'Brien will take up his criminal docket beginning Monday morning. Cases originally set for last Monday will be called first. It was the belief of the court that hearing of the Lee Potts case would consume the most part of the week and for that reason other cases were continued. The case of Earl Fetzner, charged with robbery by firearms, is set for Monday and George Henry, charged with the same offense is also due to go to trial.

OTT DENIED NEW HEARING
Special to The News.
BEAUMONT, Texas, Oct. 25.—Motion for a new trial was denied L. L. Ott, local druggist here, following arguments before Judge C. N. Ellis here Friday.

Ott was fined $25 and costs on a charge of violating the state pharmacy laws. It was alleged that prescriptions were not filled by a registered pharmacist. Notice of appeal was filed and the case will now be taken to the court of criminal appeals.

MANY REQUEST POLL EXEMPTIONS
Special to The News.
BEAUMONT, Texas, Oct. 25.—That people of a ripe old age are still anxious to exercise their voting privileges is shown by the number of poll tax exemptions issued to persons past 60 years of age at the office of Miss Ada Lockhart, county tax collector.

An exemption was issued during the past week to B. J. Warwick, 640 Avenue G, who gave his age as 81. Several exemptions were issued to men and women between the ages of 75 and 80. When giving the information necessary for the issuance of the receipts, a number declared they were still working. A total of 16 exemption receipts have been issued since the first of the month.

LEE POTTS GOES TO PEN
Special to The News.
BEAUMONT, Texas, Oct. 25.—Lee Potts, who was recently given a 15-year penitentiary sentence here for murder, was taken to Huntsville this morning. Two prisoners from Kountze were also taken at the same time in custody of R. C. Cloud. Potts was tried in the 58th district court and wanted to be sentenced at once so that he could begin serving his term.

LARSON DENIED NEW HEARING
Special to The News.
BEAUMONT, Texas, Oct. 25.—S. F. Larson, Port Arthur chiropractor, was denied a new trial on a charge of violating the state medical laws by Judge C. N. Ellis, in county court at law here, Saturday afternoon.

Arguments on the case were presented by Judge J. E. Rose and A. Gunter for the defendants and Owen Lord and James Harrison for the state. Larson was tried following the return of a grand jury indictment and was fined $50 and costs with a 10-day jail sentence. Evidence was submitted to show that he used an electrical machine in giving treatments.

Notice of appeal was filed and the case will now be taken to the court of criminal appeals at Austin.

K-P'S TO MEET IN DAISSETTA
Special to The News.
BEAUMONT, Texas, Oct. 25.—A district meeting of Knights of Pythias will be held at Daisetta, Texas, on Monday, attended by members from Port Arthur, Port Neches, Orange, Beaumont, Silsbee, Natchitoches, Lake, Daisetta and Houston.

John L. Danna of Daisetta will preside as chairman at the meeting and the address of welcome will be given by Rev. J. Z. Tower. The program for the day follows: Piano solo, Miss Sophia Abshire of Daisetta; address, "Benefits to Be Derived by Belonging to All Branches of the Order," C. W. Gerin of Port Arthur; recitation, Miss Alice Tom Harris of Daisetta; "Why Members Should Assist the Officers of the Lodge," A. L. Leonard of Beaumont; piano solo, Miss Louise Patrick of Daisetta; "Why You Should Keep Your Financial Obligations With the Lodge," E. C. Hazard of Daisetta; violin solo, Miss Autumn Weatherly of Daisetta; "Protect Your Loved Ones," Judge J. B. Synnott of Beaumont; "How to Create Interest in Our Meetings," V. D. Reid of Daisetta; vocal solo, Miss Mossella Taylor of Daisetta; "Sunshine Boys," C. L. Hackney of Beaumont.

Reports from all lodges represented will be heard, followed by round table discussion on topics for the good of the order.

TO CONSIDER WATER CONTRACT
Special to The News.
BEAUMONT, Texas, Oct. 25.—Commissioners court will be called on to either accept or reject a contract submitted a week ago by the Beaumont Waterworks department at their regular meeting Monday morning. Final plans for supplying the new county tubercular hospital with water have not been decided upon, but it is expected that they will accept the contract offered by the city.

According to county judge B. B. Johnson, a rate of 35 cents per 1,000 was offered.

JACKSON HEADS RED CROSS ROLL CALL
Special to The News.
BEAUMONT, Texas, Oct. 25.—The annual Red Cross roll call has been set for November 24 to November 27 with Ben D. Jackson as general director. Red Cross drives in nearly all other parts of the country have been set for Armistice Day but the date was changed here on account of the South Texas state fair conflicting dates. Beaumont has been asked for $14,000 which will care for a deficit of last year's drive. Team captains and assistants will be named the present week.

$35,000 ASKED IN NEW SUIT

T. and N. O. Made Defendant by B. F. Pye

Special to The News.
BEAUMONT, Texas, Oct. 25.—Suit for $35,000 damages was filed in 58th district court here today by B. F. Pye, local attorney for survivors of Mavor Smith, against the T. & N. O. railroad. According to the petition, Mavor Smith was employed as a switchman at the time of his death and injuries he is alleged to have sustained were caused by negligence on the part of the railroad, it is charged. He is survived by his widow, Catherine Smith, and a minor son, William Mavor Smith.

50 ENTERED IN BUSINESS CLASS

Retailers Sponsor Teaching Of Salesmanship

First week of the business administration school begun last Tuesday morning by Miss Ada Terrill, business expert, under the auspices of the school board and Retail Merchants' association, resulted in 50 employees from local business establishments beginning the course and showing enthusiasm over the possibilities promised.

Miss Terrill spent the first week in classification of the student body. Determination of individual experience and what each will need was the aim of the instructor. Miss Terrill said that as soon as the class members are divided into groups as to experience and rating, individual work will be given each.

Three classes are held each evening. The same courses are offered at each. This week will see the classes closed and no more students admitted as the schedule is about to capacity now, those in charge state.

Merchants and employees have expressed themselves pleased with the course and expect great good will come from it, association heads said Saturday.

POLL CLERKS FACE CONSPIRACY CHARGE

MUSKOGEE, Okla., Oct. 25.—Joe Witt, Muskogee county registrar, and five precinct registrars of the county were arrested by federal officers today, charged with conspiring to violate the United States election laws by refusing qualified voters the right to register.

Only one registrar of a city precinct was arrested, J. M. Brogan. Other Muskogee county precinct registrars arrested are Charles V. Nafe, Brant Fisher, Stewart Effort, and J. M. Keith.

The men were arraigned before United States Commissioner R. M. United States and released on $1,000 bonds for trial Monday.

NAVAL EXPLOSION REMAINS UNSOLVED

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—Examination of the inspection reports of the Cruiser Trenton render untenable the theory that deteriorated powder may have caused the explosion on board, which has resulted in fourteen deaths, Secretary Wilbur announced.

While the ordinance bureau has a definite theory of the cause of the catastrophe, the secretary said, it would not be divulged or commented upon while the court of inquiry is sitting in the case.

NEW LAMP BURNS 94% AIR

Beats Electric or Gas

A new oil lamp that gives an amazingly brilliant, soft, white light, even better than gas or electricity, has been tested by the U. S. government and 35 leading universities and found to be superior to 10 ordinary oil lamps. It burns without odor, smoke or noise—no pumping up, is simple, clean, safe. Burns 94 per cent air and 6 per cent common kerosene (coal oil).

The inventor, J. T. Johnson, 609 W. Lake St., Chicago, Ill., is offering to send a lamp on 10 day's FREE trial, or even to give one FREE to the first user in each locality who will help him introduce it. Write him today for full particulars. Also ask him to explain how you can get the agency, and without experience or money make $250 to $500 per month.—Adv.

WOMAN SLAIN, CLERK IS HELD

Throat Slashed, Husband
Arrested in Chicago

CHICAGO, Oct. 25.—When Allen Moore, 30, a clerk, waited three hours to see the wife he had murdered less than 24 hours before, police arrested him on suspicion.

"You'll find your wife in the morgue," he was told. Yesterday in a fit of anger, Moore had slashed her about the throat and arms. She died last night. "I did not know I killed her," the grief-stricken husband sobbed tonight. Police believe Moore murdered his wife while intoxicated.

COUNTY NOMINEES

guson, first broke in open fashion when a ticket four days ago mysteriously sprang into being in Beaumont naming a new slate for county officers, all of them said to be strong Ferguson adherents. This was followed, according to gossip, by charges that it was a deliberate effort of Butte supporters to embarrass the regulars. These, according to the same gossip, charged that it was the work of Ferguson men to throw a scare into the insurgent democratic ranks and force a number of recalcitrant nominees, said to be leaning toward Butte, to terms.

So far as any public statement has been made for behind the ticket are still unknown.

Then the democratic club entered the situation by passing resolutions demanding that nominees show their political cover, and that unless this color was fast and fadeless such nominees should quit the race.

Questionnaire Draws Fire

A questionnaire mailed to county nominees drew sparks of fire from several receiving them, these declaring that the club was not a regularly organized institution and as such was without organized right to question their democracy and without power to carry out any penalty.

This was the way the situation stood Friday afternoon, when it was announced by the democratic club, of which Judge M. S. Duffie is chairman, that it would convene Saturday afternoon for further deliberations of facing the right of nominees to complete the race if they deserted the head of the ticket. Announcement was made also that the executive committee and nominees would convene jointly and probably take a walk at the democratic club for essaying the role of county arbiter.

Meeting of members of the executive committee and nominees was in star chamber session, the gathering deciding to ban all outsiders, including representatives of newspapers. Five minutes later the meeting adjourned. It was then announced that it had taken no action on the questionnaires received from the democratic club.

Less than a dozen nominees attended the meeting.

Sax Meeting Not Official

P. A. Dowlen, chairman of the county democratic executive committee, declared Saturday that he knew nothing of the meeting called with the nominees, and that if it was being held it was only by general understanding and not in an official way.

"Can any nominee or nominees be forced to resign if they support Dr. Butte for governor?" Judge Duffie, chairman of the democratic club, was asked Saturday.

"I do not believe such action could be taken," Duffie said, "but democratic nominees who support a republican for governor should resign for honor's sake."

Several nominees, on the other hand, have openly declared their support of Butte was not consistent with democratic principles, charging that in 1922 members of the democratic club bolted the ticket and supported George Peck, republican, for United States senator, refusing to support Earle B. Mayfield, the democratic nominee.

Fair Over, Visitor From Lockhart Leaves

W. M. Linnam, who has been visiting his daughters, Mrs. Earle B. Jolley and Mrs. George W. Bryant, has returned to his home in Lockhart. Linnam was in Port Arthur for the first annual fair, and declared the exhibits and displays among the best he ever saw, friends said.

out of 10 cabinet officers who took office in March, 1921.

Henry Cantrell Wallace was born in Rock Island, Illinois, on May 11, 1866, and made his residence at Des Moines, Iowa. Marrying before he went to college, he struggled for his education in agriculture at Iowa State College by breeding stock and corresponding for newspapers, graduating in 1892.

After spending two years as professor of dairying in his Alma Mater, Wallace entered journalism, ultimately building up Wallace's Farmer. He has been associated with this paper for 25 years prior to his selection as Secretary of Agriculture. During these years, he played a prominent part in all agricultural activities in the west and was a loyal worker for the Y. M. C. A.

President Harding selected him for his cabinet through a desire to have a greater portfolio in the hands of an experienced farmer, but Wallace's administration was not without troubles. His friends frequently charged that misdeemeanors were frustrated by politicians who threw political considerations in his way and his resignation was often rumored.

One of his first conflicts was with Secretary of Interior Fall over administration of his natural forests, which Fall sought to transfer to the interior department. Another arose during sessions of the departmental reorganization committee, when a proposal for transferring the important bureau of markets from the agriculture to the commerce department.

Last summer there was a dispute over the merits of the McNary-Haughen and the Norbeck-Burton bills, Wallace backing the former and President Coolidge the latter, and again there was a question as to whether Wallace would stay at his post. Congress rejected both bills, however, and nothing happened.

More recently while Wallace was in the hospital, his resignation again was discussed.

Wallace is survived by his widow, three sons and three daughters, one married to a Swiss diplomat and now in Paris.

President Coolidge tonight sent Mrs. Wallace a letter of sympathy and condolence, which read in part as follows:

"I do not need to tell you that all of us who had been associated so long with him share with you in the sorrow which this hour has brought. His loss will be indeed a grief to the entire nation for his fine qualities and able, untiring services had endeared him to all the people.

"Coming from private life to the post of Secretary of Agriculture at a time when the administration was surrounded by acute and unprecedented difficulties, he brought a particularly effective equipment of wisdom, industry and executive capacity."

Out of respect to the memory of Wallace Acting Secretary of State Joseph C. Grew, at the direction of President Coolidge issued a proclamation ordering all government departments to be closed Monday from 9 until 1 o'clock and all flags at half staff until interment at Des Moines.

Charles F. Marvin, director of the United States weather bureau will be acting secretary of agriculture until a successor to Wallace is appointed.

REORGANIZATION FOR FAIR SEEN

First Officials May Serve On New Body

Election of officers for another year and possible complete reorganization is the main matter to come before the Port Arthur Fair association before definite plans for the future can be made, officials state.

It is the belief of most who are interested in the fair closely a good portion of the initial personnel will be maintained on next year's force. A working organization planning, organizing and functioning the year round seems to be the opinion of those officials on whom the brunt of the work has fallen, as the most plausible assurance of next year's success.

Reorganization Easier

President Gene Gifford states reorganization and planning for next year will not be such a problem as was the initial attempt. The experiment state passed, Gifford points out next year's fair is assured of several things, which this year's exposition did not have as a working basis.

Among these are fact first and most important, Gifford states, Port Arthur wants a fair and will support it. This is vouchsafed with attendance records totaling more than 100,000 for the five days of the fair. "Sell the fair. Port Arthur first" was the ambition of the officials. This they all are united in believing was accomplished gratifyingly.

To remedy deficiencies

Deficiencies of this year's exposition can be remedied in the light of experience gained and result in better unison all the way around next year, is another point stressed.

Next year's fair must have more room. This means not only more buildings and exhibit space but actual ground. This is the big problem the new official body or the old one re-elected must begin on at once and work consistently throughout the year to solve, is the general belief. Port Arthur's marine possibilities must be strasse and this will mean if the Pleasure Pier is used again for an exposition ground it must be enlarged. A huge water carnival to be a distinct unit of the fair and one of the largest along with a marine exhibit building is in line with the expansion program and which dovetails with the space problem. That the Pleasure Pier can have acres added to its space and special water event apparatus for boats and the like installed is possible, some state.

Fair officials concede the Pleasure Pier island if it can be enlarged to meet the fair demand for space can be made the most ideal exposition ground in the south. Other Texas cities with major annual expositions and backed by long years of experience cannot approach Port Arthur's natural advantage for water events because of the proximity of Lake Sabine to the city, these state.

Want Larger Ground

Enlargement of the pier grounds then will be the first problem as soon as the new organization is effected. This will be followed with plans for permanent buildings and an athletic park. Need of a city park and athletic ground to be created on land belonging to the city near the bridge has been a hobby of the Chamber of Commerce and Shipping athletic committee for sometime.

That the work of this committee would be incorporated with the fair enlargement program is the idea now advanced by those in touch with the situation.

The ultimate aim is to grow into a gulf coast sectional fair. This will be undertaken this year, officials say. To what extent depends on the rapidity with which the building plans materialize, is the situation now.

A THOUGHT FOR TODAY

A virtuous woman is a crown to her husband; but she that maketh ashamed is as rottenness in his bones.

WHAT'S GOING ON IN THE WORLD

By CHARLES P. STEWART
NEA Service Writer

Perhaps the world's best fighters, disunion has kept the Mohammedans weak for centuries.

In the last few years they have shown signs of returning strength. They might have recovered it under Kemal Pasha if he had been a religious enthusiast. He was not. Kemal staged Turkey's comeback. The suit was the Mohammedans' religious leader. When Kemal threw him out as sultan, he threw him out as a religious leader, too. In making Turkey a republic, Kemal provided for its government, but he left Mohammedanism headless as a religion.

Hussain Ibn Ali

This Jew sultan of England, England controlled the Red Sea strip of coast called the Hedjaz, of which Hussain Ibn Ali claimed to be king.

The English idea was to back Hussain and make him the Mohammedans' religious leader also. As the Mohammedans' religious leader, he figured he would have great influence with Moslems everywhere.

England has many Moslem subjects and there are many more she likes to keep under her sway.

Through Hussain she could do it, she believed.

The Sultan of Nejd

It worked pretty well for a while. Then Ibn Saud appeared. He was a Bedouin chieftain known as Sultan of Nejd. He had a rag-tag army, not very strong, but he was a fanatical Moslem and so were all his men.

Mohammedans are easy to "enthuse." They swarmed to Ibn's banner. He declared war on Hussain and beat him in every fight. Now he had taken Mecca, the Moslems' "holy city," chased Hussain off the throne and proclaimed himself religious leader of all Islam.

It is this means a Mohammedan revival—as it may—trouble in the light of the whole world.

There are more Mohammedans than Protestant Christians on earth.

Election

With election less than two weeks off the presidential campaign still is far more than many less important campaigns have been. The people seem interested, judging from the way they've registered, but there are no fireworks. If neither Coolidge, Davis nor La Follette gets a coalition majority, however, it's safe to count on the electoral college, and probably into congress a little later on.

In England

The English campaign started as a triangular contest, too—conservatives, liberals and laborites.

But conservatives and liberals seem to be clubbing together against the labor party.

It's much such a campaign as the American one would be if the conservative republicans and democrats combined against the progressives, including the middle-of-the-roads and the progressive elements from both old-line groups.

In New York

NEW YORK, Oct. 25.—You can see through the walls of New York homes by looking at the clothes line. The Sunday morning wash is more eloquent than that of any other day.

On an East Side or Harlem line you will see a pair of faded overalls and a denim coat, the only working suit of a laborer. Consequently Sunday is the only day his wife may wash it.

At another tenement window, one suit of men's heavy underwear, diapers of a young baby, rompers of an older baby, school dress for an older girl.

Then atop some of the apartment houses where working girls live. One line with one pair of silk stockings, one each of undergarments. Another line with half a dozen pairs of stockings and no undergarments. "There is only one deduction to be made. The young lady who hangs out no undergarments wears silk ones. They would fade if hung in the sun."

This clever observation is not original with your modest correspondent. A young lady read between the wash lines for him.

In Brooklyn an auto dashed through the street at break-neck speed. Pedestrians had to leap to escape it.

Over the spare tire on the rear, one could glimpse a sign which said, "Safety First—Vote for M. . . . B. . . . for Assemblyman."

He lost a vote from everyone who had to jump out of his way.

She's a pretty waitress in an up-town restaurant. She tells me that every day she finds notes and telephone numbers under plates where flirtatious gentlemen have eaten. She never answers any of them.

But she gives them to her sister and her sister passes them around among her girl friends.

—JAMES W. DEAN.

Everybody Happy

Sybil—It's no use denying it. Maud I saw some young man kiss you in the garden. I'm ashamed of you.

Maud—I don't see why you should be. I've often seen George kiss you. Sybil (engaged to George)—Yes, but I allow no one but George to kiss me.

Maud—Well, nobody but George ever kisses me.—Answers.

RICH MAN'S SONS FIGHT OVER SPOILS IN GOULD SETTLEMENT

When Jay Gould died he left an estate valued at more than one hundred million dollars and a gigantic system of railways for his heirs to dominate and control. His eldest son, George Jay Gould was made chief trustee.

George Jay Gould is dead. His brothers and sisters and his grandchildren are quarrelling over the spoils. Provisions of his will have been violated. This is one of the contentions of the plaintiffs. George in handling the vast estate, is said to have feathered his own nest.

Millions of the Gould money have been dissipated or squandered by Jay Gould's children in foreign lands. Litigation has been on several years. It was precipitated when George Gould died leaving a widow and a brood of small children born out of wedlock.

Jay Gould was said to be the keenest business man of the period in which he lived. He had a battery of the wisest lawyers that money could hire. Now referee James R. O'Gorman is taking the evidence of all parties to the suit and all the witnesses.

He will submit his report at the conclusion of the hearing to a supreme court justice of the court of New York. This will not close the suit. It will be kept in the courts for years. Jay Gould got his start in life by selling a patent mouse trap. His children and his grandchildren are making merry with the millions he left behind.

Wise men make a division of their wealth before they cross the dark river. Then the favored ones are permitted to blow their patrimony out to nurse and increase it. It is their own funeral regardless of the road they take.

James J. Hill, the builder of the northwest, left behind him an enormous fortune. Now a son and two daughters of the dead giant have brought suit against Lewis Hill, the favored of his father, to compel him to restore to the other heirs valuable property which the mother of all had bequeathed to the first of the flock before death called her away.

Why should the scrub scion of a noble sire wash dirty linen in the courts?

HE ANNOYS YOU AT MOVIES

The poet who reads the captions or subtitles aloud at the movies is not so easy to explain. He is an intricate study in psychology, the sciences of why men do as they do, is thus annoy of his neighbors.

Always there is some one with him. In fact, he wouldn't think of reading the titles aloud if he were alone.

So, then his motive is most apt to be to create a favorable impression on his companion. He is vain; feels superior; fears that the party he is with is not as quick and alert as he is—that the printed words will vanish from the silver screen before his companion can read and grasp them.

Hence, in his vanity, he calls the neighbors' attention to his companion's dull wits by reading titles aloud for him. Quite unconsciously, though. Does it by instinct, often without realizing. But it is by such acts that men betray their real selves—their repressed emotions and opinions of themselves.

Again, there may be another motive. When men are alone, as in the woods, for any length of time—or women alone doing housework—they are apt to form the habit of speaking to themselves. Even carrying on a conversation with an invisible presence—a sort of twin or second self.

A spectator at a movie is not alone. . . as he learns by the growls when he feels his way through the dark to a seat, stepping on others' feet, tripping over sprawled-out legs or sagging onto hats.

But the movie may so interest and fascinate him that all else vanishes except the plot unfolding on the screen.

His mental attitude is that he is alone in the universe, watching a drama or comedy staged for his special benefit. He forgets that he has neighbors. And, like the man actually alone in the wilderness, he talks to himself—occasionally a comment to the screen players, but more often repeating of subtitles. Behold him, temporarily hypnotized.

WHY THE AGREEMENT

"Why should a secret agreement be made between the agents of government and a private corporation?"

This for the Harding-Coolidge administration leaders to answer.

Now the Alaskan railroad is not a private concern. It was built by the government and the money was taken from the pockets of the people. There is a John Pierpont Morgan Alaskan steamship company. This steamship company is the beneficiary of the secret contract made by the agents of the government who operate the Alaskan railway company, built by the people, paid for by the people and primarily intended to be run for the benefit of the people.

What of the agreement? Why, it gives the lowest possible rate to the steamship company and charges the highest possible freight rate to all the competitors of the company and all who are engaged in mining in Alaska.

Is this a democracy or a plutocracy?

A WAIL FROM WEEKS

John W. Weeks is secretary of war. He was named by Harding and continued by Coolidge. Six years ago the independent voters of Massachusetts cast him off when they elected David I. Walsh to the United States Senate.

Now John W. Weeks unless all the conservative voters unite Senator La Follette or Governor Bryan may be the next president.

Well, if the conservatives are alarmed about it, why not advise them to unite in John W. Davis, the strong right arm of the Wilson administration, the champion of the constitution and the courts of the fathers, the able lawyer and accomplished diplomat and a candidate for the presidency who has taken the people into his confidence and declared his position on every issue, great or small, which has been precipitated into the campaign?

John W. Weeks is bluffing. If the conservatives want a government incorruptible and courageous of the Grover Cleveland backbone type, then they should flock to John W. Davis.

GLUTTON

Discovered; the diary of Rev. Woodforde, who died over a century ago. He describes a dinner he attended in 1774: "The first course was a large cod, a chine of mutton, some soup, a chicken pie, puddings and roots, etc. Second course, pigeons and asparagus, a fillet of veal with mushrooms and high sauce, roasted sweetbreads hot lobster, apricot tart and in the middle a pyramid of Syllabubs and jellies. We had a dessert of fruit after dinner, and madeira, white port and red to drink as wine."

The Eternal Battle

An Illustrated Editorial

A CONSTANT and never-ending battle is waged between two giants.

One giant is Government-by-Minority. He controlled the people for thousands of years. They had no voice in how they were ruled. Their lives and their wealth were at the evil giant's disposal. Government was corrupt, cruel, enslaved.

The other giant is Government-by-Majority. This giant is kindly. He is the champion of the rights and welfare of the people. He stands for all that is good and desirable. Above all, he brings political freedom and the opportunity for clean government.

These two giants fought for centuries—thousands of years. Our ancestors gave their blood and treasure to help Government-by-Majority finally win. To us came a sacred heritage, the ballot, the right to rule ourselves instead of being ruled by and for others.

But increasingly the people are failing to vote. Nearly half of the citizens, eligible to vote, stayed away from the polls in the 1920 presidential election. Our protector, Government-by-Majority, once more is in peril of losing out. He needs ammunition—ballots—to keep the other giant, Government-by-Minority, subdued.

Which giant will you help this year? If you vote, you help Government-by-Majority. If you neglect to vote, you help Government-by-Minority.

Vote without fail!

COMMENT IN THE PRESS

(From the Uvalde (Tex.) Leader-News.)

ON THE GOVERNOR'S RACE

I observe that you occasionally publish some opinions on the peculiar situation we have in Texas in the governor's race and knowing that you welcome expressions of different viewpoints I submit the following:

I am not a voter in the November election without making my conscience. If I vote for the democratic nominee I, in a measure, vindicate my husband and make de facto governor the man who was impeached while occupying that high office and barred from again holding it.

So well established were the charges on which he was impeached that some of his partisan friends in the legislature found it necessary to vote on some of the counts. Surely there can be no difference of opinion as to whether a man guilty of misdeeds for which he was impeached is a worthy adviser, even, of the governor of this great state. Some of these acts are similar in nature to those of Senator Fall, for whose misdeeds we hope to bring the republican party to account this fall.

A man who has, and will be again, a grave menace to the welfare of the state and particularly to our great universities.

I cannot vote for the democratic nominee without the sense of committing a great moral wrong against the welfare of my state and the university in which I believe so strongly.

I learn from the press that I shall not do a legal wrong in scratching the name of this candidate. I am glad of that, because I try to observe our laws. But if I were a criminal, I should be a selfish coward to help put back in place of opportunity the man who committed the deeds against the state for which Ferguson was impeached to save myself from such punishment.

I am stating the moral aspect of my act—not yours. If you think Ferguson is suitable for the place he will occupy if Mrs. Ferguson is elected, why vote for her. I do not think so and I am going to vote for Dr. George C. Butler, whom I believe to be a good and capable man who will fill the office with credit to the state and to himself.

If I violate my pledge, who can complain? Not Ferguson, for he scratched the whole ticket two years ago. Not the democratic party in Texas, for it has set its seal of approval upon that practice by "vindicating" the arch blotter of 1922.

To be consistent the party should hand me a nice office two years hence, or at least slip one to some member of my family. But I will not deserve that as I shall scratch only one democratic nominee.

So I shall serve my state at a real sacrifice. Ferguson can not complain and the democratic party cannot complain. In fact, in helping again to bury Ferguson I shall best serve my party, which received its real blow when a strange combination of circumstances in the two primaries again made Ferguson a menace. If the party can not be divorced from his leadership, then I adopt the sentiments of Ferguson's Forum in 1922. "It is a blowed up concern and ought to die."

Ferguson and the Fergusonites are

Burke for the office. Their whole campaign so far is on the proposition that all the opposition is from republicans and ku kluxers. They are wrong. My case is representative of many in this community and all over Texas. In the 27 years since I attained my majority I have never missed voting in a democratic primary or a general election, and I have never scratched the democratic ticket. I guess I am a democrat—up to now.

I am not a "ku kluxer," have never applied for membership in that organization, have never attended one of its open meetings, never listened to a public speech in its behalf and I have never even attended one of its public initiations even as a distant spectator. I am wholly out of sympathy with what purports to be the ku klux stand on racial and religious matters and the unlawful acts of violence that are attributed to it.

I am not a ku klux. But when all the citizens of Texas are driven into either the Ferguson camp or the ku klux camp, you will find me with the ku klux. They are showing evidence of reform, Ferguson is impenitent—F. M. Gentzender.

Your Dreams

And What They Mean

"I just wanted to run but it seemed as though my legs wouldn't move." You have often heard people say that in telling of the dream the night before.

Actions and sensations at the moment are important in discerning true nature of a dream. When there is a sensation of uneasiness or distress though everything seems favorable, there is concealed danger or disappointment lurking somewhere.

Approaching illness or a great obstacle to success comes if difficulty impedes your action.

Interpretations
If you are dancing joyously with a friend, there will be happiness and love. If dancing vulgarly, pleasure will overcome discretion.

If you are digging a ditch, you are making trouble for yourself. Falling denotes something unfavorable or loss.

If you fight with others, side-step quarrels in love or business. If you overcome opponents, you will be victorious over your enemies.

If you are following some one and overtake him, success in love will come; but if they escape you, your love affairs will fail.

ORIENTALS AND THE LOVE KISS

Chinese and Japanese do not kiss. But American movies will start this delectable custom in the orient, predicts Lillian Eichler in her new book, "The Customs of Mankind."

That's plausible, and probable, even though it does strain the imagination. A picture the emotionless poker-faced "Chinks" practicing the art of seduction.

Lumbrico long since claimed that kissing is an occidental custom exclusive to America and Europe. However, we never could shake off a notion that even in China the lovers must instinctively kiss in private. Scientists say not.

In this dry and desolate age, when the punch bowl is legally taboo, marriages are supposed to be celebrated by drinking tea, strawberry pot or ice cream sodas, it is a comfort to many to look back to the good old when—

In ancient Northern Europe, married couples drank mead, a high-powered wine made from fermented honey, for 30 days after the marriage ceremony. This came to be known as the "hot v month." That is the origin of the word "honeymoon," writes Lillian Eichler.

The bridegroom got his name from his custom of having to wait at table on his bride—taking the place of the regular servant, a groom. This symbolized devotion and submission to his loved one.

That famed institution, the big wedding cake, had a very practical origin. A French cook observed the custom of serving 100 little cakes to the bride and groom. The cakes were concentrated into one mass.

The marriage ceremony in ancient days was often fantastic. There are primitive distorts of the world that still preserve the system by which a man and woman were considered married as soon as they ate out of the same dish.

Rice is thrown after the departing married couple because of its being the oldest symbol of productivity.

Six hundred years ago in France, Lillian Eichler records, "It was considered a luck, thing to win bride's garter, and everyone rushed for it at the conclusion of the ceremony."

I see wisely left out "garter" and "dancing" where it would have been hard in the shuffle. So so a wise brides conceived the idea of throwing her bridal bouquet.

EASY LESSONS IN AUCTION BRIDGE

ARTICLE No. 1

If there is any one thing that keeps most auction players from becoming experts, it is because they cannot concentrate on what they are doing. When you are playing auction, don't discuss some other topic or think of something else. Keep your eyes on the cards and your mind on what you are doing. No man has ever attained success unless he kept his mind on what he was doing and off what he was not doing. The same thing applies to success as an auction player. You must keep your mind on what you are doing or you will lose track of a card just at the time when it is most important. "When you are playing auction don't think of anything else." In the following hand Z was "thinking of something else" or he would have been more alert to the situation.

Hearts—J, 9, 4, 2
Clubs—J, 7
Diamonds—6, 5, 3
Spades—9, 7, 5, 2

Hearts—K, 8, 6
Clubs—10, 5, 4
Diamonds—K, J, 10, 9
Spades—K, 10, 6

Hearts—Q, 7
Clubs—A, 8, 6
Diamonds—A, Q, 8, 7, 2
Spades—A, 4, 3

No score, rubber game. B dealt and bid one no-trump, Z doubled and Y bid two spades. B and Z passed and Y bid two no-trump. Y and B passed and Z made the mistake of doubling. If his mind had been on what he was doing he would have known that both A and B had good hands and that his partner, Y, must have a worthless hand. None of these self-evident facts occurred to him, however, so he doubled two no-trump. A, a very smart player, figured that he and his partner probably had Z in a bad position so redoubled. Y was now in a position where he was positive that Z could not defeat two no-trump so bid three hearts, his other four card suit. B doubled this and Z bid three spades which A doubled and defeated 400 points. Z's failure to keep his mind on what he was doing had proved very expensive. The same player, Z, a few games later, held the following hand:

Hearts—7
Clubs—8, 4
Diamonds—A, 9, 7, 2
Spades—A, K, Q, 8, 5, 2

There was no score and A, the dealer, bid two clubs, Y bid two hearts, B two spades and Z doubled. A promptly bid three clubs, Y bid three diamonds, B four clubs and Z four diamonds. So far Z's bids were correct. A now passed, Y passed and B bid four spades, which Z promptly doubled. A now bid five clubs, Y and B passed. Here Z was up against a proposition as to whether he should double five clubs or bid five diamonds. If his mind had been on what he was doing, he would have realized that if he and his partner held the top cards in three suits, that A-B could not make five clubs. . . . that it might just as well be possible that he and his partner could not make five diamonds. In other words, the angle was in favor of a double of five clubs and against a five diamond bid. Z, however, missed these points and bid five diamonds. A doubled this and defeated the bid by 100 points, winning two club and one heart tricks. If Z had played the certainty as he should, he would have defeated the five club bid by 200 points, winning two heart tricks, one diamond and one spade trick. It is on hands such as this that the real expert shows so much superiority over the average player. His mind is always on what he is doing and he never allows himself to think of anything else. That is the secret of good playing—concentration and more concentration.

Problem

Hearts—A, Q, 10, 7
Clubs—None
Diamonds—None
Spades—3

Hearts—K, 8, 4, 2
Clubs—J
Diamonds—None Spades—None

Hearts—9
Clubs—4
Diamonds—5
Spades—8

Spades are dealt and Z has the lead. What is the best opening bid?

NEDERLAND, Texas, Oct. 25.—All spaces but one have been rented in the annex of the Twink drug store building, several offices having been taken up, while a tailor shop and a barber shop are to be included later. M. W. Oakley, justice of the peace, has moved into the new building, opening an office for fire insurance.

C-C DIRECTORS CONFER TUESDAY

To Discuss Exposition at Nederland Meet

Special to The News.
NEDERLAND, Oct. 25.—Directors of the Nederland chamber of commerce will meet Tuesday night in what is scheduled to be an effort to place the organization on a new basis of strictly community interests. Politics and personalities are to be abolished, directors hope.

Directors will also discuss the plan of sending Sabine district products to the New York exposition next year. The Sabine district industrial association at its meeting last week proposed renting of floor space at the exposition, and various members of the Sabine district are to contribute to an exhibit.

REV. W. H. FORTNEY OPENS REVIVAL SOON

Special to The News.
PORT NECHES, Oct. 25.—Rev. W. H. Fortney, pastor of the First Baptist church here, is soon to conduct a revival at the Highland Avenue church at Beaumont. Rev. Fortney recently closed out a successful meeting at Vinton.

He has had several invitations to conduct other revivals but states his work here will prevent his accepting all.

Ku Klux Bogeyman Leaves Kansas to Stump Missouri

Allen White Spreading Contention in Political Ranks as Charges Fired From All Sides

Klux Klan bogeyman has left Kansas and William Allen White to cross over into Missouri and spread contention in the ranks of democratic voters just when Missourians were congratulating themselves on the orderliness of their state's campaign and condoning the antics of their neighbors in Kansas.

White, seeking the office of governor on an anti-klan platform after bolting the Kansas republican organization because of its alleged klan hue, has been touring the state in his second-hand automobile, denouncing the hooded order in the most scathing terms.

Bomb Is Exploded
In Missouri, there was not a cloud on the political horizon as Dr. A. W. Nelson, democratic nominee, and Sam Baker, republican entry, contended for the governor's title. It was a well-ordered, sedate and uninteresting affair until some farmers down in Nelson's home county made affidavit that Nelson was a klanman.

Off blew the lid and Missouri is in the midst of a turbulent pre-election muddle with Nelson denying membership; republicans insisting on it, and democratic anti-klan voters wondering just what to do. Democratic leaders have threatened to bolt Nelson, unless he proves conclusively that he did not join the klan at a meeting held near California, Missouri, in June, 1923.

The democratic nominee has said throughout the campaign that he was not a member of the order and in answer to the allegation of his opponents, declared he was only a spectator at the klan meeting.

Political observers believe the result of the charges will be far-reaching, coming as they do just before election. Prospects were bright, until a few days ago, that the democratic ticket would carry the national ticket across in the state.

It is admitted now that these may be dimmed somewhat.

Kansas is expected to return its usual republican majority although the independent ticket promises to draw considerable support from both old parties.

White Springs Charges
White has charged both Ben Paulsen, republican gubernatorial nominee and Governor Jonathan M. Davis democratic candidate to succeed himself, with being too closely allied with the "cow pasture politicians" and the "shirt-tail rangers," as he terms the klan leaders.

The Emporia editor has made a whirlwind campaign and admitted, has caused considerable embarrassment to his opponents. The latter have had uncompromising remarks to make about White, his alleged political "flip flops" and his failure to attack United States Senator Arthur Capper, who has klan support.

But through it all, White goes on making speeches, first pages, and his supporters say, many new votes.

BUSINESS MEN JOINING CLASS

Athletic Club at Franklin School Booms

More weight for thin men, and less weight for the heavy ones, with more muscle added to all is the slogan adopted by the Port Arthur Business Men's Athletic Club, meeting next Monday night at 7:30 o'clock for their second lesson in the boys' gymnasium at Franklin school, officials of the organization said Saturday.

Bathing suits and rubber soled shoes are the uniforms members of the class are using for their gymnastic exercises, which last from 7:30 until 9:30 p. m., followed by 30 minutes swimming in the pool, Captain D. W. Eddy, Scout Executive, supervising the athletic instruction, said.

Turning out for the meeting Thursday night were Julius Deutscher, sponsor of the athletic class; A. B. Miles, W. G. Robinson, J. C. Muller, J. A. Coles, F. Greenburg, and C. H. Huff.

TROOP 16 PLANNING TO CONSTRUCT HUT

Plans for the construction of a Boy Scout hut for members of Troop 16, sponsored by St. George's Episcopal church, are being made by the troop committee, A. Harding, member of the committee, said Saturday. At a meeting of the troop committee Thursday night, attended by Rev. John Ridout, Jr., rector of St. George's church, and E. R. Clements, scoutmaster, arrangements were made to have instruction in signalling, knot tying given the Scouts of Troop 16.

Scouting With the Boy Scouts

Halloween coming up for Boy Scouts next Friday night is bringing out plans for parties and hikes to celebrate the holiday, and Troop 16 at its meeting Friday night decided to give a Halloween party to the Camp Fire Girls of St. George's church, officials reported Saturday.

Summer vacations, well forgotten and the work of the fair over, the Scouts are settling down to their fall and winter activities and instruction work. New members are being added to the various troops, their reports show.

The following reports and announcements from troops were issued Saturday by Scout headquarters here:

Troop 15

We will have our regular meeting next Tuesday at 7 p. m. We will also have a winter roast on this night, so everybody come.

RAY BILLEAUD, Scribe.

Troop 17

Our meeting was opened last Monday by Lady Richard, acting Senior patrol leader, at 7 p. m.

The Scout oath was said in unison after which dues were collected. All will note that our meeting has been changed from Tuesday to Monday. Last meeting was the first since the change was made. The attendance was small but we know some of the Scouts did not know of the meeting change. Next Monday the meeting will be called at 7 p. m. sharp. We want and expect all of the members to be present and on time.

The new leaders and troop officers were installed. The newly elected officers are Eddie Bellot, senior patrol leader; James Bollinger, scribe; Arthur Aycock, Chris Raguth and Harry Domingue, patrol leaders. Sunday at about 8 a. m. all members of our troop will be expected at the Lake Shore diamond. A game will be staged against the Bicycle troop. Remember, boys, the Bicycle troop is no cinch. We only beat them 14 to 12 the last game we played, so be on hand so we can beat them again by a larger score. They are also determined to win, so we will have a good fight.

The pledge of allegiance was given by all and the meeting was closed by 8:30 p. m. Be sure to be on time for the next meeting and the football game.

JAMES BOLLINGER, Scribe.

Troop 11

We have been disbanded for the summer and this is our third meeting so far during the fall season. Our first meeting was taken up with getting the old members back together again and our meeting last night found all members present. We also have a few more new members. We want to encourage only those who want to join the Scouts and stick with us. Our meeting next Friday will be called off account of it being Halloween, but the meeting the following week is to be a good one and there is a surprise in store for all.

Rev. A. J. Flowers, who has had quite a lot of experience with boys and their work in the Y. M. C. A., gave us a talk on camping. A few games were played and the meeting was closed.

PAUL KETCHERSIDE, Scribe.

Troop 16

We had a real good meeting last Friday night. We held open air sessions on the lawn of the church. Several new candidates were present. The meeting was opened with the color ceremony and following this we discussed troop business. The bicycle patrol and a new hut were discussed again. We have decided to form a bicycle patrol among our first class Scouts. Headquarters for the Bicycle patrol was discussed and we are trying to obtain the little building used as an information and registration booth during the Quarter Centennial for this purpose. The building now stands at the north end of Procter street. We have worked out plans for earning the money to build our regular troop headquarters. It is planned to station a few boys at the various large grocery stores and carry packages home for customers desiring same, a small fee being charged for the service. Caddyng on the links also met favorable responses. These plans have been worked out in many of the other cities and proven successful. They will be further discussed at the Troop committee meeting next Tuesday night, the best ones to be adopted.

We are going to give the Camp Fire girls of this church a party next Friday night, which happens to be Halloween. We will have the party at the church and afterwards we will go on a hay ride. Everyone is invited to attend and have a good time. As this party falls on one of our meeting nights we will not hold a regular meeting until the coming Wednesday night. Don't forget your money on this night to be used for defraying the expenses of the party. We will also know at this meeting what our committee decided on our work proposition. We played "Kelly Say So" for a while and then took excdises to warm up better. We were dismissed about 9 p. m.

Remember, next meeting will be held next Wednesday.

J. C. WATKINS, Scribe.

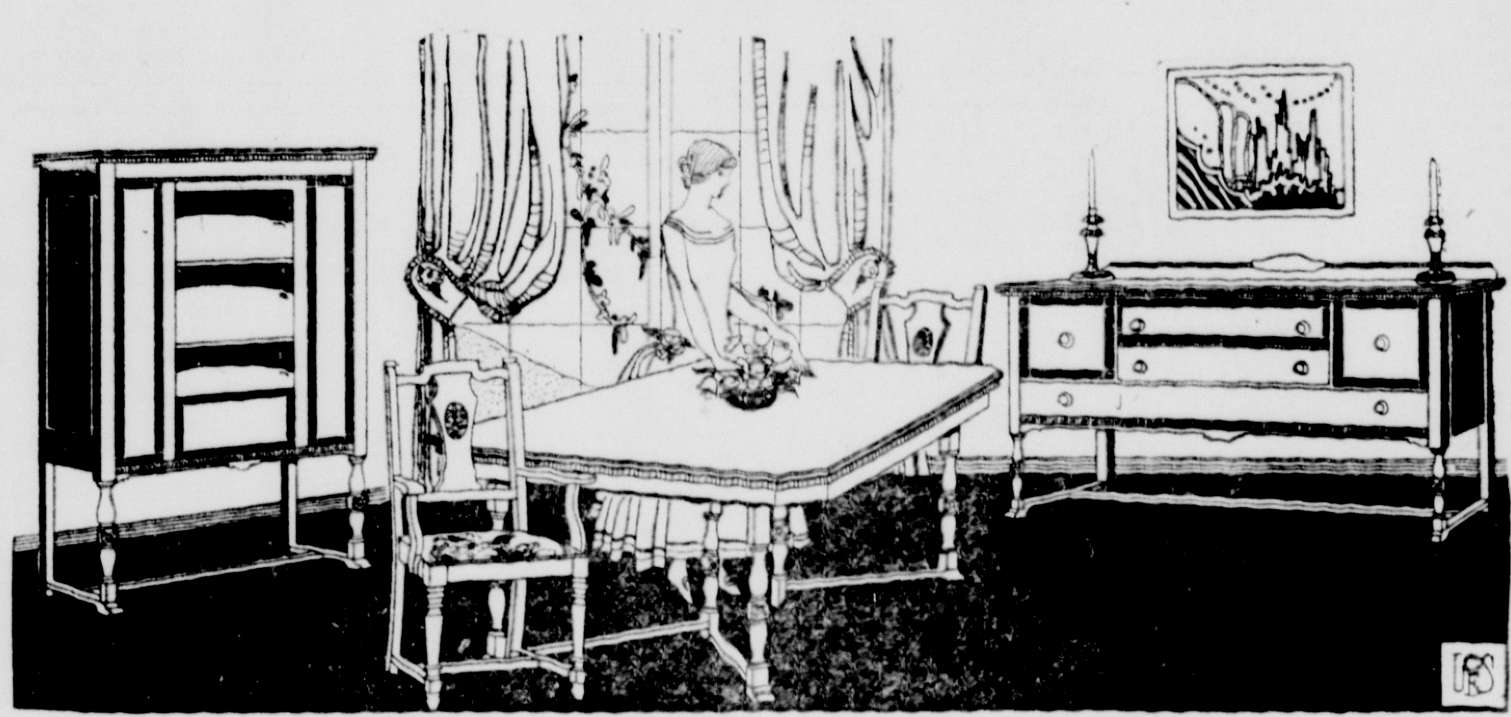

Troop 4, of Port Neches

Election of officers for the troop was held Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, and Moran of Port Arthur was unanimously elected Scoutmaster. Other officers elected are Wilson Reaux, assistant Scoutmaster; Claude Collins, senior patrol leader; Lloyd Deroun, assistant; Alfred Hebert, patrol leader for Patrol 2, and Ruthford Gillard, assistant; Blanchard LeBouff, patrol leader for Patrol 3, and Levi Landry, assistant; and Thomas Bluffin. Future meetings will be held every Saturday at 7:30 p. m.

Early Construction of Intracoastal Canal Now Looked Upon in Optimistic Light

EXPECT FUNDS FROM CONGRESS

600-Mile Stretch Would Bring Huge Tonnage

Nine feet of water with a bottom 100 feet wide from New Orleans to Corpus Christi, a distance of 600 miles, is the prospect offered by the intracoastal canal, which project is expected to be adopted by the next congress at a cost of $15,973,000. The project has been recommended for completion by government engineers. Passage of the act for the construction of the canal was defeated at the last session of congress only by the early adjournment on June 7.

Begin 20 Years Ago

Only 23 years ago a conference was held at Victoria, Texas, when the Intracoastal Waterway League of Texas and Louisiana was formed with C. S. E. Holland of Victoria chosen as president. Holland served for year after year as head of the organization, although 20 years ago the interest of congress was only lukewarm. However, sentiment gradually changed when, with the expression of the railroads that systems of waterways would have to be adopted, a network of canals for the Mississippi and Ohio valleys was worked out. Much barge traffic is carried on in the regions of the Mississippi and Ohio rivers, but the Texas-Louisiana intracoastal canal is still dormant, although now at the moment of seeming fruition.

Endorsed by Goethals

The intracoastal canal backers realized that nothing but a through waterway with a nine-foot depth would do, and emphasized the construction of the canal in its entirety or not at all. The convention at Houston, La., in November, 1922, agreed on these points and decided to start an intensive three-year campaign for the building of the canal. According to the intracoastal canal association began work January 1, 1923, and secured of congress the authority for a survey of the project's possibilities.

Colonel G. M. Hoffman of New Orleans reported back to congress in June, 1923, that he had completed a preliminary investigation and that a thorough survey should be ordered. This was done.

Through the efforts of J. S. Cullinan of Houston, chairman of the advisory council and former president of the Texas Company, General George W. Goethals, who engineered the Panama canal to completion, was secured to make the survey. Three months were spent in the work, and it was not long before it was reported that there was in the territory of the canal alone an annual commerce of 5,000,000 to 7,000,000 tons of goods, with an estimated value of $351,946,000. General Goethals added that with the maintenance of a nine-foot canal in the Mississippi river, with the completion of Ohio river improvements and with the enlargement of the Chicago-Mississippi canal, the tonnage possibilities of the canal would exceed 12,000,000 tons a year.

Recommended by Young

Major Young checked up the reports, held hearings, gathered further data and last March made an exhaustive report to Washington which strongly recommended completion of a nine-foot waterway, 100 feet wide at the bottom, from New Orleans to Corpus Christi. The recommendations were submitted to congress on April 2. A hearing was granted the intracoastal backers by the rivers and harbors committee of congress, and after only one day of testimony heard, the committee unanimously voted to include the project in the bill then being prepared. When congress adjourned on June 7 the rivers and harbors bill was one of the pieces of legislation caught in the jam, but it seems the bill, with its appropriation for the Texas-Louisiana canal, is certain of passage in the coming session of congress.

Five Years to Complete

Fully as important in the bill is the provision that all waterway projects shall be completed within five years. This will insure the completion of the great Mississippi valley system, adopted for the most part for 15 or 20 years, but only partly completed.

Waterways which would be completed under the bill would be the Ohio river from Cairo, Ill., to Pittsburgh, the Illinois river from the Mississippi through the Chicago drainage canal to Chicago, the Mississippi river to Minneapolis and St. Paul, and the Missouri river to Kansas City in addition to the Texas-Louisiana project.

The canal would connect all the ports of Texas from Port Arthur to Corpus Christi and would link with the 4,000 miles of canals in Louisiana which are capable of light-draft navigation. The report of Colonel Hoffman sets forth that the Texas-Louisiana project offers the best possibilities of any similar project in the country, not only in available tonnage in the Gulf Coast region, but in cheapness of construction.

Marie's a Bride Again

Potential Tonnage Enormous

In the report of the board of engineers to United States chief of engineers, the tonnage possibilities are sketched as follows:

"The proposed waterway passes through a section of the gulf coast which is rich in natural resources and has a considerable and growing population. Immediately west of the Mississippi it has navigable connection with six Louisiana parishes, which are among the most important sugar-producing and milling areas of the United States. West of the Teche it passes three important salt mines, at Jefferson Island, Weeks Island and Avery Island, whose potential production is almost unlimited and which at present are producing in the neighborhood of 400,000 tons per year. Farther west the route is directly through the largest single rice-producing area of the country, and along the southern edge of important stands of yellow pine, cypress and hardwood.

"In the vicinity of the Sabine and Galveston Bay ports are groups of oil refineries, operating both on the production of local fields and on crude oil piped from the mid-continent fields or imported from Mexico. These ports engage in a large foreign and coastwise traffic in oil, including a considerable movement of crude and fuel oil from the Sabine to the Galveston Bay ports. At Sulphur, La., Freeport, Texas, and Gulf, Texas, are the only sulphur mines in the United States operating on a commercial scale. Their total output is in the neighborhood of 2,000,000 tons annually, which generally supplies the needs of the country and enters largely into export trade. The Sabine ports and the cities of Galveston, Houston and Texas City, together with the neighboring refineries and oil fields, are consumers of steel and miscellaneous products from Pittsburgh or Birmingham; and Houston the largest city in Southeast Texas and the focus of a number of important railroads, is an important distributing center.

Westbound Tonnage

"From these facts it is evident that there is, beside strictly local traffic, the possibility of a large through movement on the waterway, consisting partly of raw materials moving east to New Orleans or to the consuming centers of the Mississippi valley, partly of manufactured products moving west, and partly of oil, sulphur and other commodities moving from points of production

Marie Prevost is married again. Her latest husband is Kenneth Harlan, who of the movies. Here they are leaving Wilshire Presbyterian church, where the ceremony was performed. Kenneth is seen shaking hands with the officiating clergyman, Rev. John A. Eby. Harlan, like Miss Prevost, has been wedded before.

to intermediate ports along the route for export or coastwise shipment. Assuming satisfactory conditions as to equipment, rates, and channel, the estimate in the special report for the annual tonnage of a nine-foot waterway, section by section, is approximately as follows:

Between New Orleans and Morgan City, 1,600,000 tons, two-thirds east bound.

Between Morgan City and the Sabine ports, 1,100,000 tons, about balanced.

Between the Sabine ports and Galveston Bay, 1,000,000 tons, four-fifths westbound.

Between Galveston Bay and Gulf Texas, 700,000 tons, principally east bound.

NEGROS CONDUCT UNION MEETING

Colored Pastors On Lengthy Program Here

A union service with all the negro churches in Port Arthur will be held at Zion Baptist church, West Tenth and Washington avenue, at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon, celebrating the third anniversary of the pastor of the church, Rev. J. H. Seymon.

Pastors of the other negro churches in the city are on the program for short talks, and a special musical program will be given. Provision for seating white people who desire to attend the services also will be made.

BALLOON SETS FIRE TO TELEPHONE POLE

GAINESVILLE, Oct. 25.—Local firemen have heard of grass and bonfires setting telephone poles ablaze at their bases, but they were greatly amazed when they responded to an alarm here Wednesday and discovered a telephone pole ablaze near its peak, 20 feet from the ground. An investigation shows that a toy balloon had become lodged against the pole and the flames from the blaze in the balloon, necessary for its inflation, had set fire to the pole.

TEXANS SPEAKERS AT COASTAL MEET

CORPUS CHRISTI, Oct. 25.—Major P. G. Lovenskiols has returned from the annual convention of the Intracoastal association of Texas and Louisiana, held at New Orleans last week. The convention was a very successful one, he said, adding that the address of Roy Miller of this city was an especially good one. Mr. Miller is active vice president of this city made the president of the association. Judge Hugh response to the address of welcome.

Beaumont Out to Break Yellowjacket Contract

Purple Seeks Game For Magnolia Park Claiming Priority

Situation May Develop Into 1923 Impasse If Houston Central Smears Port Arthur Record Next Saturday

SEVENTEEN days into the future Port Arthur's Yellowjackets are scheduled to play Beaumont on Franklin field, if—

Yes, if Beaumont consents to play. The contract says Beaumont shall play here this year, but what's a contract?

It has been talked about on the streets for the last week or so that Beaumont would not play here, but encouragements were given that everything would be smoothed over and that Beaumont would play here after all. But with the game of all games drawing nearer and nearer, the situation is as doubtful as ever.

Therefore, The News "breaks" the story this morning of how the officials are trying to lead the football tag to the water. So far they haven't been assured the Beaumont horse would come to the trough when time comes, and of course it's very doubtful whether the critter will drink or defeat after he gets there.

Contract for Two Years Signed in 1923

Facts of the case are that Beaumont is under a two-year contract with Port Arthur, dated in 1923, and providing for 1923 and 1924 games. The 1923 game was to have been played in Beaumont, with this year's game here. Last year Beaumont kicked out of the traces and forfeited in the matter of the contract, and this year Beaumont has intimated to Port Arthur that the Purple either will play in Beaumont or not play at all. Beaumont claims that since last year's game was not played the first game should be played in Beaumont with Port Arthur to have the 1923 game. Probably Magnolia park would draw a larger crowd than Franklin field, but no mention is made of this.

Last year Beaumont did not care to risk its claim to the district title against the Yellowjackets and forfeited with a clear record, playing Waco at Beaumont. Port Arthur had been defeated by Houston Central and Houston Heights, while Beaumont was undefeated, and Director Roy B. Henderson at Austin of the University of Texas intercollegiate league awarded Beaumont the title on the basis of a better record. But those are bygone.

Beaumont is certain to reach November 11, the date for the Port Arthur game, with a clear record. Port Arthur is undefeated so far but has not met a single strong team.

Yellowjackets Have Very Hard Game for Saturday

Port Arthur will meet its first competition next week at Houston against Houston Central, and may very likely come out of this game defeated. Beaumont has a set-up against Orange this week. While Coach Smith carefully scouted the Houston Central-Orange game at Houston Saturday, the Yellowjackets are due for a hard, hard game.

If Houston defeats Port Arthur, the Beaumont game may become more important than ever that the game be played in Beaumont, and if an amicable agreement is not reached may claim the district title on the basis of their record. Again, the situation will be the same as in 1923.

If Port Arthur is defeated when November 11 rolls around, a game will be forced by the league. If Port Arthur is defeated the situation of 1923 may repeat itself.

However, high school officials are making every effort to smooth things into shape for the big game to be played in Port Arthur.

Chicago Ties Ohio State 3-3 With 30 Seconds Left to Play

BY HENRY L. FARRELL
United Press Staff Correspondent
OHIO STADIUM, COLUMBUS, Oct. 25.—For fifty minutes this afternoon Bob Curley, a little Chicago youth, was wrapped in a blanket on the bench watching a wrinkled faced old man for the word that would give him the chance for the glory that is the dream of all college boys.

There was one minute to go and Ohio State leading Chicago 3 to 0 in a game that meant doom for Chicago's chances to win the western championship.

Curley had been in but was removed for a heavier man, but his chance came.

"All right, get in there, Curley, and do some kicking," the veteran coach, Alonzo Stagg, told the youngster.

Curley went in and with 30 seconds to go he booted a 30-yard drop kick for the field goal that ended the game in a 3-3 tie.

One Goal, Then Another
Fifty thousand spectators in the huge stadium had just become set for an Ohio State victory when Chicago rallied with a game heart and rushed the ball down the field to State's 15-yard line.

The Ohio forwards fought as only college football players can fight when they see a game slipping and repulsed the charges that Chicago made in desperation for a touchdown.

When the chance was gone for a touchdown, young Curley took the next best thing and tried to save his team from defeat even if he could not win. He dropped back, kicked away a few pebbles and booted the ball between the posts.

It was just before that when Ohio pulled the great rally and passed the ball down within the shadows of the Chicago goal posts.

State tried for a touchdown but the Chicago line was too big, too desperate.

With one chance remaining to score, Ollie Klee, the former Steele high school boy from Dayton, dropped back to the 35-yard line and booted over a kick that didn't clear the bar more than an inch.

Fumble Losses Touchdown
The teams had fought so furiously and so evenly through three terrific quarters that it looked like State's three points were going to win but Chicago would not give up and their stout fighting hearts kept them going until the break came and they made it good.

Ohio lost a good chance to score a touchdown in the third period. They broke out with a wild passing and running attack, that advanced the ball to Chicago's 17-yard line.

Klee, who was to make up for the later, was called upon for a smash off tackle and he was charged through the secondary defense with a touchdown and hit when a big Chicago back hit him and the ball popped out of his arm into the hands of the Chicago fullback. State had no other chance to score until the fourth period started when young Klee made amends for his error.

Texas Holds Florida on Six-Inch Line and Wins 7-7 Tie

'BLUE' SMITH HURLS PASSES TO TOUCHDOWN

'Gators Fail on 3 Yards in Four Downs

AUSTIN, Oct. 25.—Taking the ball away from the mighty Florida Alligators on the Texas six-inch line, the Texas Longhorns kicked out of danger in the closing minutes of play here this afternoon and held the visitors to a 7-7 tie.

In the last few minutes of the final quarter, the Floridians advanced the ball from midfield to the Texas' 20-yard line, where a pass put it on the three-yard line. Texas took the ball when the 'Gator fourth down fell six inches short of a touchdown and kicked into midfield.

Both teams scored touchdowns via the aerial route in the second quarter. Florida counted after a series of line plunges and went over with a short pass. Texas counted in the same quarter when "Blue" Smith heaved a series of passes bringing the ball to the 'Gator eighty-yard line, where Florida called time out. At resumption of play, Smith tossed the ball without signals to Allen for a touchdown. The third and fourth quarters failed to show any scores.

Scores by quarters:
Florida 0 7 0 0—7.
Texas 0 7 0 0—7.

BERNARD! AND STEWART NEXT

Jones Challenges Ten Men for November 3

With the first double bill of the season announced for Monday, November 3, at Elks arena, and with Paul Jones of Houston challenging any 10 men in Port Arthur as a preliminary to the Stewart Bernard affair, local fans have some good bait stuff in the making for the old house town in the next few days.

Two local boys, Owen Rudwine and Frank Currier, have already entered their names to meet Jones on the proposition offered by his manager, Julius Sigel, and it was thought by local sports followers last night that others will probably enter the lists before the week rolls by.

Jones agrees to meet any ten men in the city and guarantee to throw them all, no time limit named. Should any of the 10 down Jones once during the contest, that individual will be awarded $100 by Sigel. One fall will determine each of the ten separate contests.

The main bout will come off later when Bernard and Jimmy Stewart of New York City tangle up for a $200 purse and all late receipts of the house. Stewart has been the proverbial thorn in Bernard's side since the pair got together a first time over in Houston a couple of weeks ago. Stewart at that time beat Tony through an old-time trick, by putting "The Wop" on the back and downing him when Bernard thought he had been declared winner.

Grange Kept Out as Illinois Wins 45-0

URBANA, Ill., Oct. 25.—With the mighty "Red" Grange decorating the sidelines, Illinois swamped DePaul here this afternoon 45 to 0. Five other Illini regulars were kept out of the game by Coach Zuppke.

Ray Gallman, Illinois' speedy quarterback, stepped into the role of hero, scoring three touchdowns and counting three more points on a place kick from the field.

Yale Wins at Last From Brown, 13 to 3

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 25.—In the closing minutes of the last quarter Yale opened a strong offensive and snatched her game from Brown out of the fire, winning 13 to 3.

Lagging behind through three quarters by reason of a Brown goal in the first period, Yale turned the tide when Cotte slipped through the Brown line and ran 40 yards for the first touchdown. He also kicked goal.

Earl Cooper Wins

SPEEDWAY CHARLOTTE, N. C., Oct. 25.—Earl Cooper, won the 250-mile inaugural race on the Charlotte speedway this afternoon. His time was two hours, nine minutes and 44-100 seconds.

DRAKE PULLS SURPRISE

DES MOINES, Iowa, Oct. 25.—The Drake football eleven pulled a surprise in Missouri Valley circles, trouncing the Oklahoma team here this afternoon by the score of 28 to 0. Drake scored in the first period and from then on the outcome of the game was never in doubt.

FOUR PLAYING MANAGERS

The American league is evenly divided in playing and bench managers, there being four each. It is rather unusual that four star players like Cobb, Harris, Speaker and Miller should have such signal success in the managerial role.

TAD—YALE FOOTBALL COACH

HOWARD—FOOTBALL COACH

These Joneses—what a common name, and yet what uncommon ability in nearly every branch of sport! Who hasn't heard of Bobby Jones, called by many the King of All Golfers, not even excepting "Val" r Ha-gee? Bobby won the amateur championship this year and the U. S. open crown in 1923.

In baseball there is Sad Sam Jones, the Yankee pitching star, who, on September 4, 1923, shut out the Athletics without a hit, and almost scored another no-hit, normal victory the next week. Also there is Robert W. Jones, Detroit third baseman.

Two of the best football coaches in the country come from the clan of Jones. They are T. A. D. Jones at Yale and his brother, Howard, formerly at Iowa. Both boys starred at Yale in football and baseball, graduating in 1908. Howard coached Tad's team that beat Harvard in 1909, while Tad coached "Cupid" Black's team that beat Harvard in 1913. These were the only two teams to beat Harvard in thirteen years.

Howard brought his Iowa team to the Yale bowl in 1922 and beat Tad's team, which caused rather a strain on the family tie for a while.

At Wisconsin the very successful track coach and director of athletics is Tom Jones. He was a former football star at Springfield, Mass., and later coached track at Missouri.

John Paul Jones was one of the greatest runners who ever donned a spiked shoe. He broke the world's record for the mile in 1911, and two years later beat that mark by just one second, setting a record of 4:14.76.

Another famous Jones is Arnold Jones of Providence, a very fine tennis player.

HANDICAPS FOR BIG SERIES OF TOURNAMENTS

Port Arthur's golfers will be out in full force today to compete in the handicap tournament for the Port Arthur News trophy cup, to be retained by the player winning it three times. Play starts in today's tournament between 10 a. m. and 2 p. m.

A tournament will be held every two months and the 12 players showing the best average scores will play for Port Arthur in the inter-city tournaments next spring between Port Arthur, Beaumont, Orange and Lake Charles.

Handicaps in the tournament today are figured from two-thirds difference between par and the estimated average score. No handicap is given for more than one stroke per hole over the low handicap man.

Handicaps follow:

PASS MISSES PONY VICTORY BY ONE YARD

Both Teams Score Early and Tighten Up

DALLAS, Oct. 25.—Playing in typical mid-season style, the Texas Aggies and S. M. U. eleven struggled to a 7-7 tie before a State Fair crowd here today.

Berry, first year quarterback for the Aggies, saved the day for his team, when he downed Bedford on the one-yard line after a long pass from Stollenwerk in the last minute of play.

S. M. U. Scores on Pass

The Aggies scored their only touchdown in the first quarter when Wilson pushed the ball across from the three yard line and Ferguson kicked goal. S. M. U. countered in the second quarter when Stollenwerk tossed seven yards to Bedford for a touch down and Reiser kicked goal. Both teams carried the ball for large gains in the last half but stiffening defense when touchdowns threatened held the last half scoreless.

Today's game was the seventh meeting between the schools and the count stands four to two with the latest game a tie. S. M. U. won the two preceding games.

More than 17,000 persons witnessed the game. Weather was ideal.

Judging by the way the members are picking 'em up and laying 'em down for the last week, nearly every member of the Country Club has decided he'll have his name engraved first on the Port Arthur News trophy to be contested today. This beautiful cup will be played for every two months, and it takes three victories for the cup before it becomes personal property to take home and set up on the mantel.

The rules call for handicap play, with the club handicap to govern, and that means something. It will be quite a job to become permanent possessor of this nice bit of silverware.

If you happen to see an extremely tall and extremely tired looking stranger coming into town at dusk, it's better than an even bet that it's Long Bob Evans, the club's new professional. For the last week he's been giving instruction to the men and women of the club, and he is kept pretty busy tramping out their golfing troubles.

Howard Smith, the golfing street car boss, has just returned from the east with a new trick golf bag, and from the way he strutted over the course a few days ago, Doc Pollock swears that he cranked on one of those eastern golf courses during his trip. At that, Doc claims he is still pretty good.

Doc Painton is running around with the "smile that won't come off." There's a reason, as Grape Nuts says, even if it's patented. Why? Well, it seems his wife made him a present of a fine new-fangled driver, and he tried for a week or so to hit a decent drive with it, but simply couldn't cut the raffle. The doctor was just about to chuck the blunderbuss thing in to the lake, thereafter, telling the missus he lost the hit, or that it was stolen. But the pro fixed things for him by switching his position a matter of a few inches. Result? Well, as should be, Bam! rich, doc's old 225 yards. Now you don't say that did for love, now, do you?

Harry May may not be a baseball player, but he has that batting slinger habit Harry's the unanimous choice of the club as champion clubhouse thrower. Thursday on the eighth he decided his drive and then enclosed and established what is figured to be the state record by throwing his club a fraction over 20 yards. On, yes, indeed, he broke the shaft out of it. But what's a matter of $4 or so between friends?

Bill Crossland stepped out and sprung a new set of golf scenery on the boys last week. Bill's knickers and socks are long enough to make the cows sit up and take notice.

R. L. Drake's another one of the club members dressing a good game these days. Playing a good one, too.

Vance Jenkins was suddenly called to Houston but says he'll be right on hand for the tournament Sunday if he has to charter an airplane to bring him back. And he'll play if he has to play on crutches. Personally, I think the pro is a joke. Not an ace joker either. He was complaining bitterly the other day about his drives not being to his liking. In a sympathetic mood we strolled over to No. 8 with him. His drive split the middle for 250 yards, and then he took an iron and laid the next one on the green. Not so bad on a par five hole.

Texas Baseball Star Turns to Football

AUSTIN, Texas, Oct. 25.—Coach Doc Stewart is considering baseball practice for his football players at the University of Texas. One of the outstanding stars on the Longhorn football team Saturday in the S. M. U. game was Fred Thompson, back field man, one of the most finished baseball players in the state, but probably the greenest football player that ever started a game in a Longhorn uniform. Saturday was the first time Fred Thompson ever played an entire football game in his college career in his school, or in camp. However, he has played baseball all over the state and is well known to the big league scouts. One day last winter Branch Rickey, manager and scout for the St. Louis Cardinals, was in Austin to pass judgment on Thompson, Heine (Dion) Howard Villalmon, and other Longhorn baseball players. Rickey saw Thompson out in center field and remarked: "That fellow looks just like the Duke Paskert the old National League star." Someone told Fred about it and he felt mighty good over it. Frank Gibson, catcher for the Austin Braves, was standing nearby and had a big laugh at the expense of Fred. "That wasn't any compliment," Fred, Duke Paskert is the greatest man that ever played baseball."

NEW LEADER FOR CHICAGO

The failure of John (Doc) to lead the Chicago White Sox makes it seem certain that club will have a new manager next year. Eddie Collins is the logical choice but it is said he is not in good favor with Comiskey. Collins has annually made Comiskey come across with a fat contract.

Connie Mack's $100,000 for Lefty Groves May Bring Many Happy Returns of Year

BILLY EVANS

Just at present lefthanded pitchers seem to dominate the major league batsmen.

So pronounced is the superiority of the southpaws over the swatters that Eddie Collins, half in jest and half in earnest, remarked to me one day last summer:

"Now that I am nearly through as an infielder, I only wish I threw left-handed. I would start pitching and stick around for about 10 more years."

The White Sox had been beaten that afternoon by a southpaw, who in the language of the ball field is regarded as a "nothing" pitcher.

By way of explanation, a "nothing pitcher" to the diamond athletes is a twister who has nothing to fool the batter, just nice speed to hit and an easy curve to follow.

However, in these days of the lively ball, the "nothing" pitcher is quite successful.

No one would ever accuse Southpaws Zachary and Mogridge of Washington of having the stuff of "Rube" Waddell, yet they stood the Giants on their heads in the recent world series, after Walter Johnson with a world of stuff, had failed.

The supremacy of the southpaw in pitching circles has caused the major league magnates to comb the country for likely material.

Just as the season closed Washington announced that it had purchased the veteran Vern Gregg from Seattle of the Pacific Coast league.

Ten years ago Gregg was one of the outstanding pitchers in the majors. In sheer ability he is one of the few southpaws I have ever admired who compared with the famous "Rube" Waddell.

An injury robbed Gregg of much of his stuff, he slipped to the minors for a few years, then left from baseball. Now at an age close to the forty mark, he is joining a semi-retired pitcher.

At the close of the world series, Mack of the Athletics broke into print in big headlines with the announcement that he had purchased Pitcher Groves of Baltimore for a price more than $100,000 and a few German marks.

In Groves, Mack gets the minor league pitching sensation of the last two years. Every major league club has been angling for his services. His figures have been terrific. Dunn for his prize left-hander. Evidently Connie Mack must have made a flattering proposition to the Baltimore magnate.

Groves has had two phenomenal years at Baltimore. His best work showed largely in the winning of the last two pennants.

He is the strikeout king of the league. In 1923 he established a record for the league, and by whiffing 300 men in 300 innings, an average of better than one an inn. Some say, however, that Groves' greatest fault is his wildness. It may be a bigger handicap than ever on the majors, where a pitcher inclined to be wild is paid out much more than in the minors.

Jackie Coogan in a South Sea adventure, full of comedy, thrills, romance and adventure, is the offering on at the Strand theatre through Wednesday, "Little Robinson Crusoe."

On his way to Australia with his uncle, Captain Dines, of the tramp freight steamer Sara Winch, a shipwreck results in the loss of all hands except Jackie and a black cat, who on a raft, drift ashore on a cannibal island.

Instead of eating Jackie, the natives mistake him for a little white god, and all is velvet for the boy, until complications that are thrillers arise. "Little Robinson Crusoe" follows Jackie's productions "Long Live the King," and "A Boy of Flanders." Willard Mack, author of the story, was engaged by Jackie's father to write the story for the latest production.

Special Orchestra to Play for "America" at the Strand Theatre

A special orchestra will be engaged to play the score arranged for the D. W. Griffith production "America," which comes to the Strand theatre November 8, according to an announcement from the Holton theatre.

The picture is built around a romance between Nathan Holden, an express rider of Massachusetts, and Nancy Montague, of Virginia, and sets forth the colonial days in the times of the Revolutionary War.

In order to accurately produce the costumes, historical settings and other features of the times, Griffith called into consultation experts and organizations devoted to preserving the records and relics, and many of the properties used are the originals, loaned by museums for use in "America," according to advance notices on the film.

For his work in making "America," Griffith has been made an honorary member of the Minute Men of Lexington, the oldest military organization in the United States.

Three rakes, a married judge and a young man on the verge of delirium tremens from the material from which "Dodo" Baxter, heroine of the James Cruze production "The Enemy Sex," coming to the Peoples Wednesday through Saturday, is asked to select a husband.

Featuring Betty Compson, with a cast that includes Kathryn Williams, "The Enemy Sex" is a story of New York life as it appears to a young girl from the country. Armed only with wit and beauty, she plays a clever game that puzzles the worldly wise minds.

That the modern girl can take care of herself in situations which would have made her grandmother hysterical is an argument advanced by "The Enemy Sex," and the action and plot of the romance and comedy is to prove it.

Under his paint and powder, Petit Fatou, clown with a second-rate traveling French circus, is really another man, forced to adopt this means of living because of financial reverses and there he sits "The Side Show of Life," in the film production of that name which comes to the Peoples theatre Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Anna Q. Nilsson is the heroine and Ernest Torrence plays the lead in "The Side Show of Life." The story is an adaptation of "The Mountebank," by Willis Goldbeck.

Two hundred and fifty veterans of the world war appear in scenes in the production. The men, all jobless, were obtained through the Veterans bureau, in New York City. Having done the "real thing" in France, rehearsals for "The Side Show of Life" were not hard for the veterans, producers found.

"Sunny Jack" Farr, a drifter through the western cow country, is the hero of "Not Built for Running," the production which comes to the Liberty theatre Sunday and Monday with Neal Hart playing the leading role.

At the Randall Ranch Farr meets Grizzly Dobbs, and as the two cannot decide which one should strike the first claim, they pitch a coin, but it hits in the mud and sticks straight up. That decided the partnership for them, and together they fight their own battles, which finally end victoriously for the pals.

The good and evil of divorce and its effect upon the younger generations is the subject of Reginald Barker's production, "Broken Barriers," which comes to the Peoples theatre Sunday, Monday and Tuesday.

Ward Trenton, a man of high ideals, is in love with Grace Durland, and wants a divorce from his wife, who admits she does not care for him. The girl, lost in mazes of her love for Trenton, is all for breaking the walls of convention that surround them.

A thrilling climax is one of the features of the play. Producers claim for it the greatest cast assembled this year.

REVIVAL STARTS AT M. E. CHURCH

Flowers Evangelistic Party Here Today

Revival services to continue two weeks begin today at the First Methodist Church, South, under the direction of the Flowers evangelistic group.

The revival has been the object of intensive planning on the part of the pastor, Rev. V. A. Godbey, and the entire membership for the last several weeks. All machinery and committees are ready to begin work today.

The evangelistic party is headed by Rev. R. L. Flowers, who will do the preaching, assisted by his wife, who will discuss women and children's phases for the most part. Detail and Sunday school work will be in charge of A. J. Flowers.

The Flowers' party comes here directly from Baltimore.

EGG IS HURLED

Republicans for the way they've talked about you; Creager's pamphlet against you was the most vituperative I ever saw, and I've ransacked the English language and cannot find all those names to call you."

Still addressing his audience "you kluckers," Dalrymple went on with "now the klansman embraces the republicans, forming an unholy alliance to drag the flag and democracy in the dust. We remembered the scull-duggery you've put over on us; but you kluckers have taken so many pledges that I have no more faith in you."

The pledge taken by those voting in the democratic primaries was compared by Dalrymple to the vows of matrimony, and as binding as a signature on a note made at the bank.

"Should a political preacher who has been urging you to break your solemn pledge get up in his pulpit on the holy Sabbath day and urge you to live righteously, stand up and tell him to his unholy face that he doesn't practice what he preaches," Dalrymple said.

Denies Jim Bolted Party

"It is not necessary to dwell on you moss back preachers if you preach this doctrine, for you are without moral fiber," he said.

Dalrymple then scored those who said Jim Ferguson bolted the democratic party. Ferguson was put out of the party, Dalrymple declared, and said "any man who says he bolted the party either don't know what he's talking about, or is telling a deliberate political lie. Jim Ferguson came back into the party when, touched by the action of leaders in Texas who placed his picture in the hall of fame as one of the governors of Texas, he asked for forgiveness and was received back into the democratic fold."

"Ma! did not practice any deception fraud, said she would run on Jim's platform and announced it to the world. That's more than Butte has done," Dalrymple said.

"Hurray for Ma!" someone near the speaker yelled.

"Yes," Dalrymple answered, "and I haven't a thing against Jim."

Says Klan Politically Dead

"Why, Butte and these political preachers and the kluckers don't you know that 'Ma' and not Jim is making this race. Why don't you political preachers get wise to yourselves and learn who's making this race for governor?" Dalrymple asked.

"Tell us about that preacher," a voice in the crowd called.

"I'm saying that for later," Dalrymple replied, and turned into an attack of the klans.

"The klans is politically dead, and I'm not going to let you kluckers go unchallenged. I'm going to hook you while I've got you," Dalrymple said.

"After the war, killing was uppermost in the peoples' minds, and before they knew it 'Buzard' Simmons, of Atlanta, Ga., a liar, thief, dope fiend and discredited preacher, thought the time was ripe to go out and harvest suckers, of whom Barnum said there is one born every minute in this country, but it was the next man, 'Buzard' No. 2, Evans, who put brains and life into the klans," Dalrymple said.

Dalrymple then took up what he said were the principles of the klans and a purported klans oath, which, he said, "covers everything from the birth of Christ to the death of the devil."

Challenges Klan "Oath"

"The imperial wizard can make any political preacher go down and sleep with a burr headed negro, if they remain true to the klans oath they took," Dalrymple said. "The 'buzards' of the klans, No. 1, and No. 2, are chasers of women of the underworld, confessed thieves, yet these are the men political preachers are following," Dalrymple charged.

"Look up the criminal court records in any lawyer's office and see if Billy Mayfield, at Georgetown, didn't confess he'd entered into contract to rob a train," the speaker challenged, "and yet the kluckers couldn't find a decent governor of Texas two years ago, so they put Billy in the race, and they came near electing him."

Someone in the audience called out here. "Tell us about the boys he tried to send to the penitentiary."

"The white livered cur turned state's evidence and crawled out of it himself," Dalrymple answered

Seething Attack on Klan

You kluckers, hypocritical liars, you'd better look closer home for your bootleggers," Dalrymple went on. "We're going to put your own klucker bootleggers out of business with the rest of them. We're going to pass a law that'll really enforce prohibition, and you'll see all these klucker bootleggers, and I suspect some political preachers, too, lobbying against it."

"You kluckers paid $10 for the purpose of being voted like niggers, but you didn't get off as light as the niggers for the privilege, who used to be voted and paid $3 each. You started out to intimidate the Jews, Catholics and foreign born, although I don't think you knew it, but when you found it out you didn't have guts enough to get out."

"Every man who wears the cloth of Jesus Christ and subscribes to the nomenclatures of klans officials, taken from a pagan, Greek mythology before the Christian religion was ever heard of, paganism is too good for you."

"You've been denying whipping, tarring, mutilation of men, and the driving of men and women out of communities, yet you've been guilty of it," Dalrymple said.

Here the rotten egg soared over the wooden shacks in front of which the speaker's truck was parked, and splattered a spectator nearby.

Pledge Not "A Dirty Shirt"

"A rotten egg from a rotten klucker. A few rotten eggs wouldn't make me feel any worse than to associate with the bird who threw it," Dalrymple said, pausing until the excitement caused by the eggling subsided.

"You can't be half-democrat and half-republican. One stands for the light of God, and the other for predatory wealth and oppression of the poor. Every damn klucker is trying to destroy democratic principles."

"When you talk about discarding your pledge, you seem to think it is but a dirty shirt. If you're a confirmed klucker and cannot stand on democratic principles, then get out of the democratic party and go with the republicans, the klans and to the devil; but let the democratic party alone and don't soil it with your unclean hands."

"If you've been trying to follow kluckers, or political preachers, and want to come back, we'll welcome you. When I find a new party that is better than the party of my fathers, I'll come out open and above board and join that party, but I won't be a hybrid."

"Now I want to pay my respects to a preacher of your city. I don't know him and I don't want to, if this is the doctrine he preaches. We are as far apart as the poles, and I hope he stays at the other end of the pole. He has a letter here, published in the Friday issue of The Port Arthur News."

Cries of "Read it, read it," came from the audience.

Attacks Rev. Dobbs

"Yes, I'm going to read it all. I'll give it to you kluckers in broken doses and then whole," Dalrymple continued, and read from the letter: "I will not vote for a woman whose main platform is to vindicate her husband, who, like Judas, betrayed the good people of Texas and sold the influence of the highest office in the gift of the people to the brewers association for $200,000, and a man who has bolted the democratic party and repeatedly said in his public utterances, 'To hell with the democratic party.'"

Ferguson did not get $250,000 from the brewers. He had every legal right to borrow $150,000 from the brewers, and any man who attempts to say he stole it, he's a bald face liar. Ministers who prostitute the gospel and make statements like that, I'm going to make 'em like it. I'm for the truth."

"Shouldn't vote for 'Ma' because Jim's bad. Now you political preachers and kluckers, drag some of your skeletons out of the closet."

VOICE: "He didn't wear a mask, either."

DALRYMPLE: "No, and he didn't carry a tar bucket."

J. E. ROSE, attorney, seated on the truck: "And Jim didn't participate in the democratic primary in the year he ran for governor on the American party ticket."

Touches C. Beaumont Meeting

DALRYMPLE: "No, he formed his own party, openly and above board, and had nothing to do with the democratic party elections."

"Someone has just passed me a note informing me that democratic nominees of Jefferson county met in solemn, secret, convocation this afternoon to decide whether they'll vote the democratic party ticket straight," Dalrymple went on.

"It is an insult to ask a man to come in on such a session, and one of your own nominees, Judge C. N. Ellis. I am informed, branded it as an insult and refused to participate in it."

"Dr. Butte, hybrid candidate of the Ku Klux Klan and the degenerate republican party, said Jim Ferguson's pardon record while governor is bad. He said 3,000 pardons were given, and while he doesn't say Jim got paid for these pardons, he implies it in his statement that if 'Ma' is elected—anybody who wants a pardon for a loved one or relative will have only to make their financial arrangements with Jim."

Recites Ferguson's Record

"Jim as governor exercised a constitutional prerogative to help men when he felt a chance to save them. O, what a Christian spirit! It became Jim's chance to pardon a nephew of Dr. Butte, and I challenge him to say how much he paid to get that pardon."

"Jim said over $1,000 per capita for the students in the University of Texas was not fair when country schools were being neglected. He advocated the building of district schools, employing teachers and giving sessions six, seven and eight months long to the poor boys and girls in the rural districts, not that he was against higher education provided in the university, but because he wanted to give better education throughout the rural districts. He told the legislature he would veto the university appropriation, but they didn't think he would do it."

"Not a governor since Jim has dared block the country schools' appropriations."

"You can't close the door of hope to criminals, opened by Jim; and he turned the state penal system operation from loss to gain, and he says 'Ma' will do it again."

Claims Ferguson's Trial Not Fair

"When the senate sat as an impeachment court, the senator from Hood county and three other senators went home and did not hear the testimony. Returning, they made inquiries about the trial, were informed Jim was a crook, and voted to impeach him. The senate was sitting as a jury, and not a court in the land would allow exit if the jurors were permitted to go home to look after their crops while evidence was being given. Jim's trial wasn't fair, and they know it."

JESSE B. PEEK, former county judge: "Are any of those senators supporting 'Ma'?"

DALRYMPLE: "All of them are. They got ashamed of themselves."

"If 'Ma' Ferguson had bobbed her hair, gone into the divorce courts and separated from Jim, alienated the love of their daughters, refused to stand by him and believe in him through sunshine and shadow, these spellbinders and preachers would be supporting her."

Sees Big Majority for Ma

"Damnation, Doheny-ism, and interest of mankind, and I want you Fail-ism is what Butte and his kluckers consort stand for. 'Ma' stands for honesty in government and democracy. I have no fear for 'Ma' not being elected by 100,000 majority, but strike down the hooded knights. Show them they cannot rule, and let them smoke that for two years. If we beat them less than 200,000 they'll herald it all over the land."

"If Butte is elected, the republicans would put Mayfield out of the senate so Butte could appoint a republican. You kluckers had better vote for 'Ma'. It wouldn't hurt you to do that. You kluckers can stand anything."

Dr. Butte and his Ku Klux friends are broadcasting over the state that the railroad commission is supporting him. Now Earle B. Mayfield says he is supporting 'Ma', because he was afraid republicans would put him out of the senate."

VOICE: "Who made the two weeks pay days?"

DALRYMPLE: "Jim Ferguson did. He's been a good fellow as governor, in his home and in his private life. He was indiscreet in borrowing from the brewers, and I told him so. He's never been a lying, hypocrite."

"James E. Ferguson is coming to address you next Friday night in the to hear him, and then, on November 4, put Butte where he and the Ku Klux Klan belong."

Approach of Halloween Furnishes Inspiration For Delightful Parties

HALLOWEEN—the time of mischief—fitting forms—erie wailings on the breeze—wild shrieks of mad, unholy mirth—is just around the corner, and with its approach come numerous delightful Halloween parties.

Out of the dim past comes Halloween. A night when ghosts walk and witches crowd and croon before their open fires; a magic night when a spell enthralls the earth and the fate of the world hangs in the balance.

This is the time of year when hostesses have a wide variety of black and orange emblems from which to choose their decorative theme, and unusual opportunity is afforded each hostess to make her party original and unusually clever. And it is not too early now to use the accessories of the season, for during the past two weeks hostesses have been selecting the Halloween motif to feature all details of their hospitalities.

The stunning black and orange combinations are found in all the emblems of the Halloween season—witches, pumpkins, bats, cats, jack-o-lanterns and numerous other symbols.

Halloween is an ancient festival which the Romans held about the first of November in honor of Pomona, goddess of fruit trees. In Britain the Druids celebrated a festival at the same time in honor of the sun god and gradually the two merged into one. When the people became Christians the leaders in the Christian church gave the festival a new association by holding it in commemoration of departed souls. Hence, All Hallow E'en, which always falls on October 31. It was believed that upon this hallowed night the spirits of the departed returned to visit their old homes. Food was left for them, hearths swept, and chairs set out before the people could rest.

Many of the superstitions are said to have come to America with the Puritans. Some have been added—some lost; but we, in America today, celebrate the night of its weird mysteries and flavor of romance and because its games foretell the future. Fun and jollity are in order on this night of all nights, but lights should be dim, sounds unearthly and as many tricks and surprises as possible be brought into play.

DELIGHTFUL indeed are the entertainments being planned for Halloween night, one of the most enjoyable of which will probably be the one in connection with the Christian Endeavor convention at the Presbyterian church. The entertainment will be one of the features of the opening session of the convention, and arrangements for the pleasing affair are now being made by Mrs. C. E. Weidner, chairman of the social committee.

The affair will be staged in the annex of the Presbyterian church, which will present a weird scene on this occasion with the lights shaded and spooks and witches floating silently about the rooms.

The party will be held at 9 o'clock. All Christian Endeavorers of the city and other young people interested in the convention are cordially invited to the convention session, which begins at 7 o'clock and the Halloween entertainment which follows at 9 o'clock.

ANOTHER pleasing Halloween party is planned for Friday evening is the one to be given by the Wendat Camp Fire, at the home of Miss Gertrude Worm on Ninth street. The guests will attend in costume and a pleasing entertainment is being arranged for the occasion. The affair is scheduled for 7:30 o'clock.

THE Moonbeams will also entertain with a Halloween party this week. The party will be held at the home of Miss Hazel Borel, 1325 Nederland avenue, on Thursday evening at 7:30 o'clock, and will be an invitational affair. Invitations for the party are being issued now to the Moonbeams and their friends.

ANOTHER affair scheduled for Thursday evening is the Halloween party being given by the Ladies Aid of the Presbyterian church. The party will take place at the home of Mrs. J. W. Williams, 1515 Procter street, at 8 o'clock and delightful indeed are the various features and the program being arranged for this event.

ON Wednesday evening the Whilers Club will entertain with a Halloween party at the home of Mrs. N. F. Pray on Thomas boulevard at 8 o'clock. Dancing and cards will afford diversion for the guests on this occasion. All have been requested to wear masks.

THREE Senior B. Y. P. U.'s of the First Baptist church, the Excelsior, Service and Loyalty unions, are planning an elaborate Halloween banquet for Thursday evening at the church at 7:30 o'clock. Mrs. W. S. Carter is general chairman of arrangements for the banquet, which promises to be an unusually delightful event.

Ladies Aid To Entertain With Halloween Party

Among the delightful Halloween parties planned for the coming week is the one to be given Thursday evening, October 30, by the Ladies Aid of the Presbyterian church at the home of Mrs. J. W. Williams, 1515 Procter street.

All guests attending the affair are requested to attend in costume. An enjoyable evening of games and contests and a program has been arranged for the occasion. Delicious refreshments will be served during the evening, and on this occasion a free will offering will be taken, the proceeds of which will go to the church building fund. Out-of-doors on the lawn a witch will preside over a boiling pot of chili and this will be dispensed to the guests for a small sum of money. An orchestra will furnish music on the lawn.

Final plans for the party were made at Thursday's session of the Ladies Aid, which had as hostesses Mrs. J. T. Williams and Mrs. R. McFadden at the annex.

At the business session the women voted to have no meeting next Thursday because of the Halloween party. The Ladies Aid will send a package to the Day Nursery birthday party next Thursday. Mrs. W. S. Green and Mrs. B. A. Schrader to arrange the package. Two members, Mrs. J. N. Payne's mother and Mrs. Van Zant were reported ill.

At Thursday's meeting articles were received for the orphanage box, and those who have not yet turned in their articles for this box are requested to send them to Mrs. W. S. Green before Wednesday noon, for the box will be sent off Wednesday afternoon. Rev. T. Alvis Davis made a short talk telling of the orphanage at Dallas.

A social hour followed and the hostesses served tasty refreshments, which were enjoyed by Mrs. F. L. Colvin, Mrs. J. J. Bailey, Mrs. T. A. Davis, Mrs. A. T. Edgington, Mrs. N. J. Hebert, Mrs. R. McFadden, Mrs. W. D. McFadden, Mrs. W. J. Moore, Mrs. B. A. Schrader, Mrs. R. N. Turner, Mrs. G. C. Woodhill, Mrs. Annie Wheeler, Mrs. J. W. Williams, Mrs. J. T. Williams and Mrs. A. J. Lettland.

The next meeting of the Ladies Aid will be held on November 13 with Mrs. B. A. Schrader and Mrs. E. J. Moore as hostesses.

MISSIONARY SOCIETY TO HAVE SOCIAL THURSDAY

The Woman's Missionary Society of the First M. E. Church, South, will hold the regular monthly social meeting Thursday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at the home of Mrs. D. W. Barron, 1348 Sixth street.

Assisting Mrs. Barron in hostess duties will be Mrs. Marvin Smith, Mrs. B. B. Carroll, Mrs. M. T. Ball, Mrs. Charles Loeb, Mrs. J. C. Hampton, Mrs. A. M. McAfee, Mrs. W. R. Fuller, Mrs. W. G. Armistead, Mrs. Oscar Spence and Mrs. L. L. Gwinn.

MRS. LOW WILL RETURN MONDAY

Mr. and Mrs. F. Y. Low and son, Frank, of 1117 Lake Shore drive, who have been making a tour of the west the past month, are expected to return to Port Arthur the early part of the week.

Latimer-Lee Engagement Here Is Announced At Party To Bride To Be

WITH the approach of the month of November come more rumors of nuptial news, and the announcement of several fashionable weddings which will be of special interest to society and which will keep society busy almost up to the holidays. Quiet weddings, without the attendant rush and bustle of entertainments, have not become the fad of the hour as they seem to have done as is evidenced by the elaborate preparations going forward now for the wedding of Miss Leonora Latimer, younger daughter of Mr. Kate Latimer, and Mr. Leslie Harold Lee, which will take place on Thanksgiving day at the First M. E. church, south.

The engagement and approaching marriage of Miss Latimer and Mr. Lee comes as a delightful surprise to a host of Port Arthur friends and was made known at a lovely announcement party Thursday evening, which had as hostess the pretty bride-elect's sister, Mrs. L. A. Gieckler, at her home in the Model Addition. The delightful secret was made known during the closing hour of the hospitality, and so closely was it guarded that it proved a complete surprise to the guests assembled on this occasion.

Exquisite autumn flowers, marigold, chrysanthemums and golden red, gave unusually attractive decorations, quantities of the glowing blossoms in graceful arrangements everywhere about the rooms enhancing the attractive interior of the Gieckler home. The white and yellow theme suggested by the tints of the favored flowers was displayed in all details of the hospitality. Hearts gave diversion during the evening with Miss Eunice Rogers scoring high and Mrs. Charles C. Perry scoring low. Mints reflecting the color note were served during the games following which a dainty salad course was offered.

The delightful secret was made known during the serving of the refreshments when the hostess presented to each guest a lovely favor, a pretty package bound in yellow and tied with a white satin ribbon. Upon opening them the guests found a tiny white satin bag filled with rice, attached to which was a small heart inscribed with the words, "Leonora Latimer and Leslie Lee, Thanksgiving Day."

The personnel of guests included members of the Stitches club and additional friends among whom were Misses Ann Welch, Grace Thompson, Louise Latimer, Constance Johnson, Reba Holmes, Addie Dismukes, Benah Floy Bledsoe, Frances Canada, Eunice Rogers, Laurela Burnham, Bessie Satterwhite, Blanche Taylor, and Leonora Latimer; Mrs. W. C. Griffing, Mrs. S. O. Latimer, Mrs. J. E. Singleton, Mrs. J. C. Hamilton, Mrs. F. W. Clark, Mrs. C. C. Perry, Mrs. A. A. Gantner, Mrs. Earl Lee, Blanc, Mrs. C. E. Booz, Mrs. Kate Latimer, Mrs. H. E. Brinkman, Mrs. Joe Gorin, Mrs. Ne Cochran, Mrs. Neal Rader, Mrs. Arthur Beard, Mrs. W. E. Follette, Mrs. H. C. Crawford, and Mrs. L. A. Gieckler.

Others calling during the evening and enjoying the closing hour of the hospitality were Messrs. H. C. Crawford, Leslie Lee, Fred Hall, James Latimer, Reagan Latimer, Maurice Latimer, and L. A. Gieckler.

REV. AND MRS. RODGERS ENTERTAIN CHOR
Rev. and Mrs. C. W. Rodgers pleasantly entertained the choir of the First Methodist Episcopal church Thursday evenings at their home, 1701 Procter street, following choir rehearsal at the church.

Plans for the winter months were discussed during the evening, and the members voted to stage a pageant at Christmas under the direction of the choir director, Mrs. E. G. Ruffner. A social hour followed and delicious refreshments were served.

Enjoying the delightful occasion were Mrs. E. G. Ruffner, Mrs. E. L. Leamon, Mr. and Mrs. C. V. Palmer, Miss Margaret Carter, Miss Lois Rodgers, and Rev. and Mrs. C. W. Rodgers.

BAPTIST WOMEN TO MEET ON TUESDAY
All churches of the various circles of the Woman's Auxiliary of the First Baptist church will meet Tuesday afternoon at the church at 2:30 o'clock. On this occasion, Mrs. G. W. Stewart, newly elected president will give them instructions in their work. All members are urged to be in attendance.

MISS TERRIER OPENS HOME FOR LOVELY PARTY
A lovely hospitality of the past week was given on Friday evening when Miss Carrie Terrier opened her attractive new home on Tenth street to the Ancient Legion Auxiliary members and their friends for a most delightful card party. Miss Terrier and Mrs. J. M. Foster received the guests.

In recognition of the Halloween season the home was attractively adorned with the Halloween emblems, their vivid colors of orange and black showing the artistic effect on wall spaces in the rooms given over to the hospitality and in the lovely autumn blossoms clustered in graceful arrangements about the rooms.

Weird-looking ghosts were arranged in the corners of the reception hall, the living room and the dining room, and black cats were on guard at vantage places about the home. The lights, draped with Halloween colors of orange and black, shed a soft radiance over the entire scene.

Ten tables of players were assembled for the pleasing affair, card tables' accessories reflecting the chosen theme. Guests were presented with Halloween cups as favors during the evening, these adding a festive appearance to the assembly. In the games Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Carter were awarded the prizes for high score; Mrs. Joe Stroud received the ladies' booty and E. L. Caldwell the gentlemen's booty. Delicious refreshments were served during the evening.

The personnel of the charming affair included Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Dunlop, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Brennan, Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Bezel, Mr. and Mrs. Barney Smith, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Mrs. H. Baker
Elected Head
Of Civic Club

Mrs. Harry Baker was elected president of the Civic club Friday afternoon at the club's first session of the season at the department club. Mrs. Baker was elected to succeed Mrs. J. B. Saint, whose resignation as president was accepted with deep regrets at Friday's meeting.

The resignation of Mrs. W. P. McFarland as treasurer of the Civic club was also accepted with regret and Mrs. Dick Schultz was elected treasurer to fill this vacancy.

A discussion over the Civic club park ensued and a communication from R. L. Drake, chairman of the park board, was read. Mr. Drake offering any assistance needed by the women.

Friday's meeting assumed the form of a reception, and following the short business session an entertaining program was given, the program being arranged by Mrs. R. E. Latimer and Mrs. John Vaughn.

Miss Althea Terry, talented artist who has recently come to Port Arthur, gave a lovely Oriental dance in costume with accompaniment by Mrs. Snell.

Mrs. Ennio S. Dixon, also a recent addition to the ranks of Port Arthur artists, entertained with a selected group of readings, following which Miss Margaret Kramer, who possesses a charming soprano voice, sang a lovely solo with accompaniment by Mrs. L. A. Durke. All the numbers were enthusiastically received.

Lovely refreshments were served at the conclusion of the program. Mrs. Joe Corbitt, Mrs. T. W. Parrish, Mrs. M. T. Ball and Mrs. Carlisle Plummer assisting in the service.

SPECIAL MUSIC AT CHRISTIAN CHURCH
C. N. Bier, director of the choir of the First Christian church, announces two pleasing musical numbers for this evening's service at 7:30 o'clock at the church.

Mrs. E. P. Butterworth has returned after a summer's visit with relatives and friends in Massachusetts and Vermont. She was accompanied home by her mother Mrs. B. J. Allen, and little daughter Mrs. Virginia, Mrs. Hunt, Mrs. Jursasch.

Mrs. Verrett Hostess To Bridge Club
Mrs. J. A. Verrett graciously entertained the Friday Afternoon Bridge club on its name day at her home, 727 San Augustine avenue, two tables of players being assembled for the afternoon's diversion.

A Halloween motif was displayed with pleasing effect in the home adornment, black-eyed Susans giving floral charm to the decorative features. Bridge table appointments also reflected the chosen theme, and the dainty salad course served at the close of the games favored the Halloween motif in clever manner.

For success in the games Mrs. J. M. Foster was awarded a lovely favor. The low score prize fell to Mrs. J. C. Brennan.

Players for the afternoon included Mrs. D. Johnson of Beaumont, Mrs. A. L. Carter, Mrs. J. M. Foster, Mrs. J. C. Brennan, Mrs. K. L. Dowdy, Mrs. A. G. Stanton and Mrs. J. A. Verrett.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY TO HAVE SPECIAL PROGRAM
The Woman's Auxiliary of the First Baptist church will meet at the church Thursday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at which time a special program on "Tithing and Sabbath Observance" will be held.

On this occasion a box for Buckner's Orphanage will be filled and all members of the Auxiliary are urged to bring their articles for the box to this meeting.

All members of the Auxiliary and all others interested in the subject for discussion are cordially invited to attend the meeting.

Mrs. H. Baker Elected Head Of Civic Club
Mrs. Harry Baker was elected president of the Civic club Friday afternoon at the club's first session of the season at the department club. Mrs. Baker was elected to succeed Mrs. J. B. Saint, whose resignation as president was accepted with deep regrets at Friday's meeting.

The resignation of Mrs. W. P. McFarland as treasurer of the Civic club was also accepted with regret and Mrs. Dick Schultz was elected treasurer to fill this vacancy.

A discussion over the Civic club park ensued and a communication from R. L. Drake, chairman of the park board, was read. Mr. Drake offering any assistance needed by the women.

Friday's meeting assumed the form of a reception, and following the short business session an entertaining program was given, the program being arranged by Mrs. R. E. Latimer and Mrs. John Vaughn.

Miss Althea Terry, talented artist who has recently come to Port Arthur, gave a lovely Oriental dance in costume with accompaniment by Mrs. Snell.

Mrs. Ennio S. Dixon, also a recent addition to the ranks of Port Arthur artists, entertained with a selected group of readings, following which Miss Margaret Kramer, who possesses a charming soprano voice, sang a lovely solo with accompaniment by Mrs. L. A. Durke. All the numbers were enthusiastically received.

Lovely refreshments were served at the conclusion of the program. Mrs. Joe Corbitt, Mrs. T. W. Parrish, Mrs. M. T. Ball and Mrs. Carlisle Plummer assisting in the service.

SPECIAL MUSIC AT CHRISTIAN CHURCH
C. N. Bier, director of the choir of the First Christian church, announces two pleasing musical numbers for this evening's service at 7:30 o'clock at the church.

Mrs. Sam Simon will give a violin selection, "Adante Religio," by Francis Thome, with piano accompaniment by Mrs. Rupert Theobalt.

Mrs. Rupert Theobalt will appear in a piano solo, "O Divine Redeemer" by C. H. Gounod. C. N. Bier will play the accompaniment. In addition to these special numbers several hymns for congregational singing will be used at this service.

ASFALTSLATE SHINGLES

-THE SHINGLE THAT NEVER CURLS

BEAUTIFY AND PROTECT These Handsome Port Arthur Residences

Carey Large Size Asfaltslate Shingles were used on these attractive Port Arthur homes for the following reasons: First because of their very beautiful natural colors; second because of their durability; flying sparke, wind, rain—even the most destructive weather does not harm them, and finally because they do not curl. This non-curling feature is your assurance of a permanently satisfactory roof.

We say that Carey Asfaltslate Shingles are beautiful. Look at them for yourself on any of these attractive homes right in your own town. We say they protect from weather and from flying sparks—the Underwriters label certifies to their fire-resistance but you can get the most convincing proof from home owners who have had experience with them. We say that the Carey Asfaltslate Shingle is "The Shingle That Never Curls," a big statement! But again proved on homes in all parts of the country and under extreme conditions and exposure.

The Carey Large Size Asfaltslate Shingle measures 10"x15 1/2"—giving greater convenience in applying and adaptability to all styles of roofs. When it is put on, only five inches of its surface is exposed and you have a roof composed of three thicknesses, a roof that will stand up under the most severe conditions.

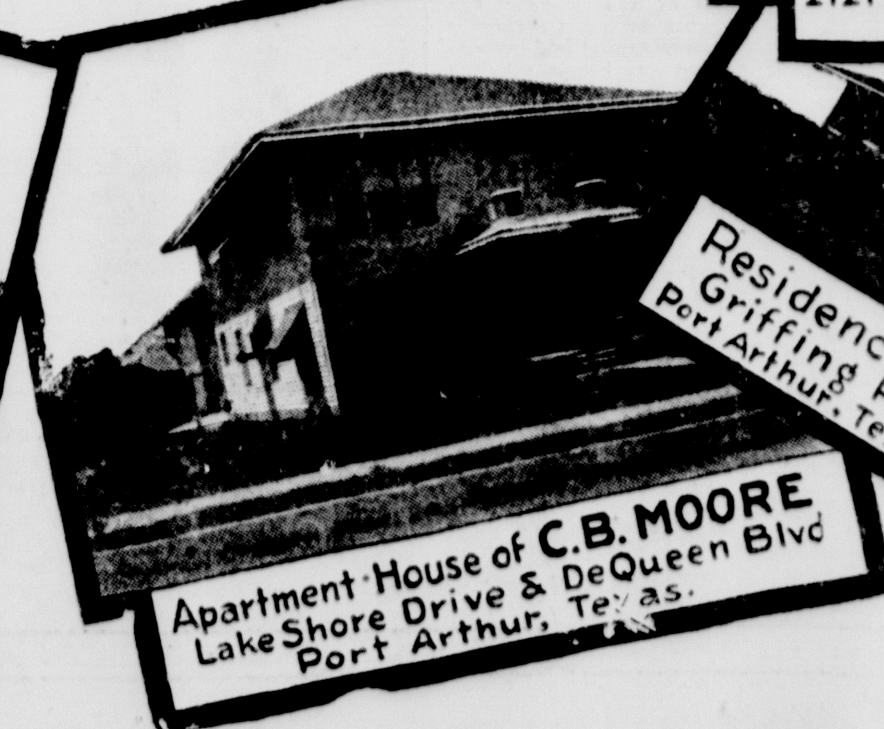

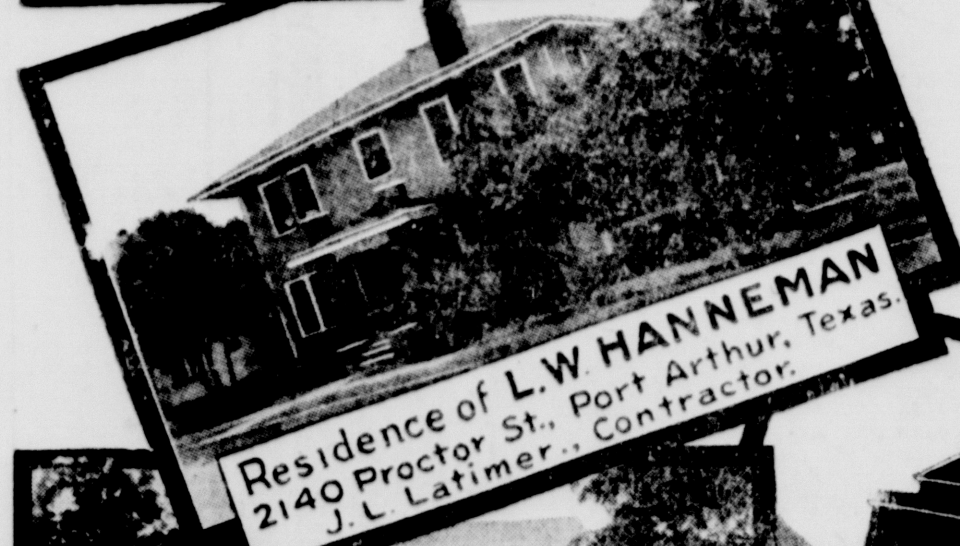

Carey Large Size Asfaltslate Shingles are manufactured in three non-fading natural slate colors—red, green and blue-black, harmonizing perfectly with any surrounding color scheme. This big Asfaltslate Shingle is admirably adapted for use on all kinds and classes of building. They are fine enough for the best homes and yet economical enough to meet the demands of a home builder who wishes to make every dollar count.

LET US SHOW YOU SAMPLES AND EXPLAIN THE MANY ADVANTAGES OF THIS BIG CAREY SHINGLE

THE CHURCH CHOIR

By W. E. HILL
Copyright, 1924.
By The Chicago Tribune

The bride-to-be, all a-flutter over a church wedding, has come to see about the music. For five dollars (so her friends tell her) she ought to get a complete organ recital from the organist, and "O Promise Me" as a solo thrown in.

Choir practice in the vestry. The quartet is singing "There Is a Green Hill Far Away" and getting away with it very nicely, considering the fact that the tenor can be counted on to get away from the key, thus causing the soprano to flat badly. The soprano claims that he does it on purpose to throw her off.

This is the basso profundo. Doesn't like the tenors, the barytone or the choirmaster.

Mr. Lyle, the organist and choirmaster combined, has had a hard evening. Nobody loves him. The sexton accuses him of having wilfully gone away without turning off the lights in the vestry, the soprano lays favoritism at his door, the choir boys have been unruly, the tenor wants a raise or he'll know the reason why, and three ladies on the altar guild have charged him with pilfering, pillaging and hoarding hymn books. Away from choir practice, the choirmaster is working on a new compilation called "Seventy-Nine Amens for Church Usage."

Miss Mable V. Greeting, the leading soprano of the choir, and a prima donna in the making if there ever was one. Miss Greeting broke down and cried last Sunday in the vestry room so lacerated were her feelings. Not only had the choirmaster conspired with the other soprano for the purpose of taking away her solo, but on good authority Miss Greeting had learned that the tenors and the contraltos were conspiring to cause her to double sharp! Isn't that terrible!

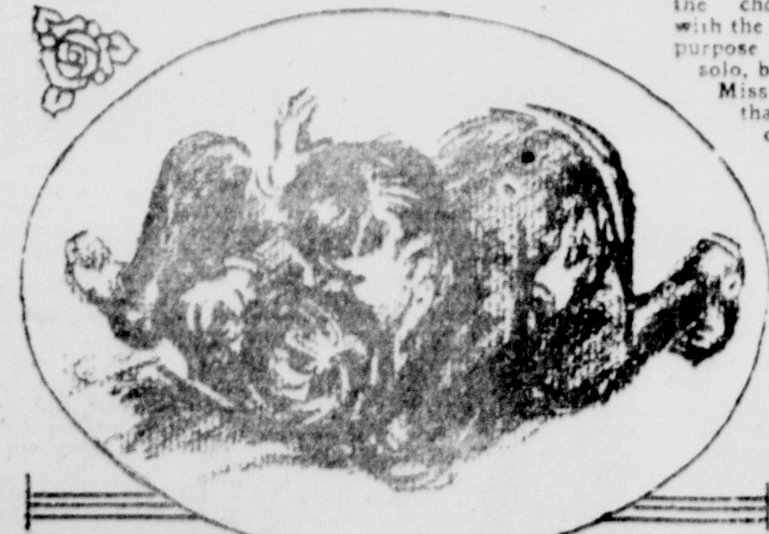

A segment of a vested choir starting merrily from the vestry, half a note off the pitch. Reading from the left, we have the boy soprano (his voice is beginning to change), two lady sopranos, two contraltos, two tenors, a bass and a barytone. It's by the merest chance that the sopranos are walking together. They are not on speaking terms. One tenor is just barely speaking to the tallest contralto, and the other contralto is being cool to the entire choir. So it goes.

This is Miss Sands, contralto, with a mezzo range, if you please. Every Sunday she will tell you the organist puts her off the key, just out of spite, such are the petty jealousies of this wicked world.

Meet Jimmy Ladderbeck and his mother. Jimmy was fined five cents by the choirmaster for absence from choir practice. Mrs. Ladderbeck is going to take Jimmy from the choir and have the choirmaster arrested if possible. Such are her mother's feelings.

Two angelic little choir boys during choir practice.

Three figures around and about a church choir: (a) the sexton, (b) the church worker who wants to run the choir, and (c) the man who comes to walk home with the contralto after choir practice. "Him and her," so the sexton says, "are keeping company."

What the Virus of Gambling Brought In Gains and Losses To the Man Called "Lucky at Horses"

BILLY RAYMER and the Belvoir three year old came into Havre de Grace on a morning when September sunshine glistened on chimney pots and church spires, on maple flaming streets and huddled harbor of the town on the Chesapeake. The three year old, favorite at every start, was shut out to the race track in pomp and panoply befitting his fame, attended by trainers and stable boys, returned by reporters and upstarts. Billy Raymer, gentleman of the betting ring, by fleeing grace out of fortune's favor, sprang from the early accommodation train unheeded and alone.

For a moment, as he looked down from the long platform on the place that held for him memories other than the winnings and the losses that made the sum of his thoughts of other courses, he hesitated over the path he would take. Up the road on a switch near the sheds the Belvoir boys were unloading Belmonte, giving to any keen eyed gambler chance for observation of that vaunted thoroughbred. Down the street the village slumbered in morning lassitude, its streets invitingly quiet to a traveler, but Billy Raymer, drawn by an impulse he no more tried to analyze than he would have striven to fathom this overpowering belief in certain wagers, he took his way, shoving back the checkered cap from his forehead as he swung down the road.

In the high sunlight of the Maryland morning he looked older than he had seemed as he had jumped from the train. Fine lines of worry creased the corners of his far seeing eyes, and deepening grooves ran down from his determined mouth, taking away at close range his aspect of boyishness; but a high daring gleamed in his blue eyes, and a reckless courage tilted his chin so that no stranger, passing him, could doubt that the man who had won a fortune on Guineas only to lose it on The Salvor Boy was likely to make another flurry on the books as he called the record closed.

With a swiftness of movement at variance from the lethargy of the scene he passed the white houses and straggling gardens of the outskirts, hastening to that place he knew of old to be the rendezvous of his fellows, the little shack where Mother Graham dispensed food while her patrons gave out the latest gossip of the Havre de Grace stables. The familiar odors of ham and eggs and coffee assailed him as he pushed open the screen door and took a place on a stool at the counter. A stout, red faced woman, turning to take his order, flung off her professional nonchalance at recognition of her customer.

"Well, for the love o' Mike," she commented, "if Billy Raymer ain't come back!" As she held out a moist hand to him, sharp eyed jockeys and sharper eyed gamblers looked up at Raymer, some with recognizing nods, other with mere curiosity born of his fame. To those who knew him, as well as to Mother Graham, he gave that one sided smile that had signaled his acceptance of the grim satire of life ever since he had sealed a board fence to watch the running of The Pocket in a long gone Derby.

"Do you know any law against my coming?" he demanded. "Not one," the woman said, heartily, passing on his order to the stoop shouldered old man who had been his wife's helper at the shack as far back as the first time Billy Raymer had seen Havre de Grace, and who stared at him now with semicircular absorption and disregard of Mother Graham's possible wrath. She herself leaned elbows on the counter and, ignoring the others, gave full attention to the newcomer. "How's the luck, Billy?" she queried.

"Fair," his grin held more amusement than friendliness, but he gave the old man a wink of understanding fellowship. "I hear you cleaned up Laurel last spring." "That was a long time ago."

"Sure, but a boy that hits the top once hits it twice." "Ain't you got it? Luck of the devil, the boys call yours, don't you, boys?"

They nodded as if they were factors in a well trained chorus, some of them mumbling unconcernedly out of stuffed mouths, others staring sidewise at him. The old man at the stove shook his head solemnly. "Lucky at horses, unlucky at love," he croaked.

Some of the men, seeing the flash of anger on Raymer's face, suggestive of a reach for a gun, frowned uneasily until they saw him regain his composure in evident realization of the old man's innocence of intention, but they lingered for a little as if in expectation of an outburst. Then, one by one, they went out of the shack while Raymer loitered over his meal until after Mother Graham had gone from the place, leaving him alone with her stooping husband.

"What did you mean by 'unlucky at love'?" he asked the old man.

"It's a saying, ain't it?" the other countered, wiping glasses assiduously.

As if understanding that no side attack would win him what he wanted to know, Raymer shifted base.

"Do you still live here?" he asked.

"When we ain't living in Baltimore?" "Many changes in town, Pop?"

"Since when?" "Since I was here last."

"How long ago was that, Billy? I ain't good at figures."

"Three years."

"Lot of changes since then?" "Do the Gisons still live here?"

"Old lady's dead."

"No?" "Yep. And Ken's in the navy."

"Where are the rest of them?" "There's only Laura."

"I know. Where is she?"

"Ain't you never met her since, Billy?"

"I've never been back."

"But she ain't here."

"When did she go?"

"Right after you."

"Hasn't she been back at all?"

"Only when she mother died."

"Where does she live?"

"O, anywhere." The old man's gesture whirled a vague circle. "Ain't you run into her, Billy?"

"Where would I?"

"Why, she follows the ponies, same as you do."

"She what? You're crazy, Pop. Some body's kidding you."

"Sure as I live, it's true." The old man bent over the counter, impressive in his unaccustomed importance of having news to impart. You went in the fall, while the races was on, didn't you? And Laura got her divorce in November, didn't she? I know it was November. Mother told me about it on Thanksgiving day. Well, she went off in December; didn't she wait for Christmas. And the next spring I heard that she won a lot of money at Latoria. Then Ken said one day before he joined the navy that she was at Belmont. Every once in a while I hear somebody mention her, saying what she won or what she lost. She wins, mostly. Goes with the name, I guess."

"But she never played a race, Pop." For all his insistence his tone faltered. "You know she didn't. Why, even though she'd been born and raised here, she'd never been up to the track till I took her there."

"Don't I know it? Folks was all Motherdy. But that ain't saying she don't go now." He set the glasses in a neat row. "You ain't thinking of looking her up, are you, Billy?" He tried to cover his avidity for gossip with a pretense of casual interest.

"Not particularly. Why?"

"O, nothing. Only I heard somebody say she was out at the track yesterday."

"Thank you, Pop." He handed the old man a cigaret, lighting one for himself. "Going to play Belmont?" he inquired, watching the gleam in the old eyes.

"Are you, Billy?"

"Not on your life. Can you keep something to yourself, Pop?"

"You know I can, Billy."

"Play Pentecost for nose in the Calvert?"

"I will, Billy. I will follow your luck."

He crossed to the store tottering, and Billy Raymer went out of the shack, pausing at the door as if uncertain of his directions, then setting forth to a street not on the way to the race track.

He tried to make his walking seem anxious, but he caught himself hastily as he turned toward the old fashioned frame house at the end of the street whose neglected doorway proclaimed its untenanted state. Not until he saw its dull look of emptiness did he acknowledge to himself that he had been cherishing a recollection of the house as it had once been.

As he passed it, as slowly as he dared in the knowledge that a score of peering eyes might be marking his progress, he made it the frame for a group of pictures that had persisted through his wandering during the years since he had seen it. The first was of Laura Gilson standing on the low porch on that April day when he had passed the place in idle strolling, but he had waited the coming of the horses from the Abbotsford stables. There had been about her then an aura of the sort of goodness he had always in his soul ascribed to womanhood, since Billy Raymer was, for all his knockabout childhood and errant youth, a valiant idealist. Because she had held in her eyes the look that his persistent dream had so often sought and as often failed to find in the women of his world, he had wooed the girl of the old fashioned garden.

He had not loved her, he had known even then; but he had hoped to love her, and even for a moment after their meeting had he failed to credit her with a remarkable influence over him. It was not that she compelled him, as other women sometimes had, to do what he did not want to do. It was rather that she held him to the doing of the thing he wished. Because she helped him in his vague aspirations toward a settled way of life that he had not dared to voice before he knew her, he lingered in Havre de Grace near Laura Gilson after the races were over; and because she unconsciously held him to his new resolve of foregoing his old gambling, he had asked her to marry him.

For a little while after their marriage her happiness, as radiantly joyous and palpitating as her gorgeous tropical butterfly, had been his contented. He had given up the track without a qualm, diving into business in Baltimore with the money he happened to have when he made his resolve to abjure the betting ring. Then the play had pulled a little, but he held to his bargain with himself stoically until one day when, coming back to Havre de Grace to bring Laura home as one of her visits to her mother and brother that she had met his old crowd and been swept by them to the track. The turn of the game had caught him back. He bet, and won. The next day he went of his own accord, and won once more. He kept on going day after day, and winning until he had a pile that he could not have earned in a year at his business.

The meet had not ended when Laura, conscious of the barrier that had risen between them, reproached him justly of untruth and unkindly of unfairness. She chose the evening of a day when the joy of the track had been keenest for him, a day when he had been wondering on his mistake in having given up for the commonplace existence they were leading, right though he believed the latter to be. He was in one of those moods when men chafe at the bit of matrimony, and in a burst of hideous cruelty he told her the truth.

"I've tried to love you, God knows," he said as they stood on the porch of her mother's house, "but I can't. I'm sorry that you care, and I'm sorer that I don't. I wish it were different, but I don't see what we can do now except go on, as long as we've started."

The look that she gave him as she left him was talking against time, staying off as possible questions he might ask her. With the patience of a man trained into waiting for his chance he let her go on until she had worn out her surface manner of easy speech. Then he shot straight. "Where are you staying now?" he asked her.

"At the Elmsmore. The answer was reluctant."

"Some class to you, isn't there?" He smiled a little wistfully. "I suppose the Elmsmore guests don't dine at Caselli's, do they?"

"O, Billy, I—do you mean you want me to go with you?"

"What else?"

"Why?" Her mouth grew hard as she fung the question at him.

"Can't we be friends, anyhow?"

"I don't know."

"Why not try for tonight?"

"All right."

She gave him a swift look that seemed to estimate the reason for his invitation and to invoke its consequences upon himself. Back of it he caught the flash of Laura as she had been in the days of their first meeting. The recognition of the old quality of girlhood beneath the veneer of her new hardness gladdened him strangely, but the joy of it died as a man pushed his way through the press of people around them and stood before Laura with an attitude of possessiveness that set Billy Raymer's blood boiling.

He was a stolid man with fishy eyes that he barely turned on Billy as he spoke to Laura. Grace, trying vainly to readjust new knowledge into old impressions.

Even after he left the town and went to the track he could not shake off his worry about Laura. With his quick imagination he could see her at every course in the country, set in crowds as alien to her type as were others to him. So altogether apart from the scenes in which she must have been did she seem that he puzzled over how he could have failed to notice her in them. As he stood at the entrance, scanning the face of every woman who came from the railway, he had the thought that Laura would flash before his vision with the blaze of an unsheathed sword. In the hush of that mood he was altogether unprepared for the shock of hearing her voice before he had seen her at all.

She was standing beside him as he turned, holding out her hand to him in a shyne that was in tremulous contrast to the arrogant opulence of her attire. Only in the flicker of self-consciousness, curiously like that of a child caught at mischief and anxious to confess her offense, did Billy Raymer glimpse the girl he had married. Her clothes, flauntingly expensive even among the women of the track, her jewels, her rouged cheeks, and beaded eyelashes proclaimed to him the distance she had gone on the path she had chosen from the parting of their ways. Watching her in a silence that he began to fear he could not break, he felt a sudden sense of remorse in his dealings with Laura.

The bunch sped down the ochre ribbon of the track, with Pentecost in the lead.

Her voice quickened in its stirring within him when she spoke, although all she said was, "How are you, Billy?" "I'm—I'm all right," he broke through his constriction of embarrassment to tell her. "Surprised to see me here?"

"A little. I just came in today. I ain't been here since."

"No," she said, "I knew you hadn't. You needn't have stayed away on my account, though. I've had no hard feelings against you."

"You could have had, Laura."

"O, it's all in the running, isn't it?" "I guess it is."

They stood regarding each other almost furtively while the crowd from the trains surged around them. Then, because he did not know how to leave her, he followed in Laura's wake to the grandstand. As he walked after her he felt a heightened resurgence of the regret that had so often assailed him for his act of disillusioning the girl. It had been bad enough to think of Laura in a Maryland garden, grieving softly for him as she had trimmed recalcitrant rose bushes, but it was infinitely worse to think of her in this new guise of pert worldliness, of hard wisdom, a follower of the races. Determination to divert her from this course grew strong within him in his realization of his own responsibility for her change. As if she read his intention she turned to him when they had found places on the stand.

"Well, what are you going to do about it?" she demanded.

"About what?"

"About me." She tried to laugh. "You look as if you were a sky pilot getting ready to give a sermon."

"I wish you wouldn't talk like that," he said, in annoyance. "You know I've got nothing to say about anything you do."

"Then don't say it." She shrugged her shoulders as if to keep on the fur cape that was slipping from them. As she put up her hand to her hat he noticed the flash of the diamonds in her rings.

"There's no reason why we should fight as soon as we happen to meet, is there?" she questioned. "We had one fight, and that was plenty for a lifetime."

In the face of his silence she rushed into glib chatter that gave him certainty she was talking against time, staying off as possible questions he might ask her. With the patience of a man trained into waiting for his chance he let her go on until she had worn out her surface manner of easy speech. Then he shot straight. "Where are you staying now?" he asked her.

"At the Elmsmore. The answer was reluctant."

"Some class to you, isn't there?" He smiled a little wistfully. "I suppose the Elmsmore guests don't dine at Caselli's, do they?"

"O, Billy, I—do you mean you want me to go with you?"

"What else?"

"Why?" Her mouth grew hard as she fung the question at him.

"Can't we be friends, anyhow?"

"I don't know."

"Why not try for tonight?"

"All right."

She gave him a swift look that seemed to estimate the reason for his invitation and to invoke its consequences upon himself. Back of it he caught the flash of Laura as she had been in the days of their first meeting. The recognition of the old quality of girlhood beneath the veneer of her new hardness gladdened him strangely, but the joy of it died as a man pushed his way through the press of people around them and stood before Laura with an attitude of possessiveness that set Billy Raymer's blood boiling.

He was a stolid man with fishy eyes that he barely turned on Billy as he spoke to Laura. Grace, trying vainly to readjust new knowledge into old impressions.

Under the carmine Laura paled, but she held her voice steady to say, "Do you know Mr. Bergen, Billy? This is Mr. Raymer."

Bergen's look, curious and hostile, roused him to speedy antagonism. The two men bowed across Laura, then settled into evident determination to outstay each other. Even as Laura waxed into a nervousness that threatened outbreak at the end of the third race, Bergen, with a shrug and an understanding smile of tolerant amusement, left them.

"See you later," he said over his shoulder to Laura.

"Who is he?" Billy growled.

"A friend of mine."

"Where's he staying? The Elmsmore?"

"It's none of your business," she said hotly.

"I guess it isn't." He pulled down the checkered cap over his eyes, scanning the track. "Ben Adhem won't win," he informed her, glad to be able to discount the spires of this Bergen, whoever he was.

"It doesn't matter," she said, "I'm holding my big bets for the Calvert." She turned to him with a defiance in her eyes that threatened to blaze into rage. "I suppose," she said deliberately, "that it seems queer to you to see me betting after all I used to say against it. Well, I've learned a lot in three years, Billy, a lot about horses and a lot about men."

"I've learned a few things myself," he said, and watched the gleam that shot to her eyes, wondering if jealousy could have inspired that. But she next words dispelled such thoughts. "I'm going to be married next month," she told him.

"Bergen?" he asked with dry lips.

"Yes."

They said no more as the fourth race ended, bringing in Ben Adhem for show, instead of the winning that Bergen had bargained for, as if they did not need words for understanding, they went from the grandstand at the end of the fifth race, taking the first train back to Baltimore. On the way they talked of commonplaces, but when they had found shelter at a corner table in Caselli's they fell into those "Do you remember" that forge bonds of steel between those who meet after long partings. Over Caselli's famous grandstand they loitered down old paths of recollection, stopping here and there over stiles of understanding. They had gone far toward the road of reconciliation when Laura pulled her cape around her.

"If I didn't know that you'd never loved me, Billy," she said, "I'd think you were trying to make me believe that you had."

She laughed as she arose, but her words sponged from the man's thoughts all the joy he had been finding in her presence. Remembrance of the night when he had stood her with the truth flooded back on him, his side embittered anew by the knowledge that he had wrecked the girl's life by his brutality. For he knew that he, and he alone, could find in this Laura Raymer of the furs and diamonds, the perfume, and the luxurious nonchalance of aspect the girl he had married. The belief that she could hold him away from the life in which his action had plunged her. Not Bergen nor any other man could know the innate honesty and sweetness and tenderness that slumbered— that must be still alive, he told himself insistently—beneath her weary scorn. He couldn't let her go to Bergen under that cloud. She could marry again, of course. She surely would, one day. It was none of his business, he admitted. But he must, before she married, restore her to the place from which his selfishness had dragged her, must set her back on that pedestal where she had reigned as his wife. He had to get her straight with herself ere their paths diverged forever.

"I'm going to see you again?" he pleaded, as he saw that she was going to leave him outside the brilliant Elmsmore.

He saw her hesitate, and he had the thought that not desire, but a sense of pity for him led her to assent.

"I'll meet you at the track tomorrow," she promised.

He watched her enter the hotel with a strange feeling of loneliness that he had not known in the years of their separation, then struck off to find humble lodgings for the night.

For three days he met Laura on the grandstand, only to have her leave him as soon as the last race was over. He had an idea that she went back to Baltimore with Bergen, and avoided any train that might be carrying them. His uneasiness about her grew, however, with the vague allusions to Bergen that he overheard in the paddock, but Laura's manner held him off from speech about her future until the night before the running of the Calvert. Then, driven into action by the broodings that kept him awake of nights, he challenged her to combat.

"You're afraid to come down to Mother Graham's to supper with me," he told her, as the crowd rushed for the Baltimore train.

"I am not," she said.

Again her glance led him to the belief that pity for his apparent poverty rather than wish for his company impelled her decision to go with him. In masculine irritation over the motive he began to brag in that whimsical way that made his boasts forgivable.

"I may be down on it today, Laura," he assured her, "but I still own the luck of the devil."

"That's what they've always said about you, isn't it?"

She fell into step beside him on the road to the town. Her eyes turned toward the bay, gleaming with sunset light, and he could only guess from her voice that a mood of sadness had overcast the gaiety that she had held through the afternoon.

"Do you need any money, Billy?" she asked him.

The kindness of her tone checked his angry refusal.

"No, thanks," he told her. "I've enough for a grub stake now, and I'll be rich again tomorrow."

"How do you know?"

It was the old question she had so often given him before their marriage on those evenings when they had come down the road, seeking the white house that stood now but a mockery of their associations with it and with each other.

"I've put five thousand dollars on Pentecost, and Pentecost is going to win the Calvert. It'll be four to one, too."

"O, Billy, you haven't." The old-time consternation rang in her voice. "You haven't put everything on him?"

"Every red cent I could steal." He laughed at evanescent memories of how he had hoarded the pile for placing on the horse.

"I can buy you a few blinders myself out of what I'll take away from the machines tomorrow."

"But if he doesn't win?"

"He's going to win."

"He'll get place, but he can't win. O, Billy, I know!"

Her voice trembled with agitation. All the indifference that had veiled her face had disappeared as she turned to him in the dusk that was speeding on the heels of the sunset.

"How do you know?"

"I can't tell you that, but I do know. Can't you change? Can't you copper?"

"I have some money I've been keeping—"

"He knew she meant the account in the bank that she had never touched—that I'll be glad to give you. Won't you take it?"

"No," he said.

"They had come to the shack where, back of the steamed windows, they could see Mother Graham and Pop dipping coffee to the men on the high stools. Raymer put his hand to the door, but Laura hesitated."

"Let's not," she pleaded.

"I thought you wouldn't," he said, with a bitterness he could not quite conceal.

"It's not that," she tried to justify herself against the implication that she had outgrown the simplicity of the common lot.

"It's the crowd. I don't feel like facing them. I'll tell you, she suggested with the eagerness of compromise, "what we'll do. You buy our supper, and bring it up to the house. I'll get the candles."

"At the grocery. Don't you want to?" she demanded, seeing his hesitation. She put her hand on his arm in supplication.

"You just watch me," he said, and plunged into the shack.

He was laden with armful of food as he overlooked her. He laughed at sight of the candles she had bought, and she laughed back, but their mirth died as they went through the dusk up the weed grown path to the house. The house was as he tried to help her with her fumbled unlatching of the door, and the quick flame that ran through his blood terrified him for the instant before he saw the glow in Laura's eyes, but she drew away from him as they entered the little square hallway and groped their way through the sitting room.

She lighted the candles she had bought, placing them on the dining room table. Then she pulled down the shades, with the comment that they might be mistaken for ghosts, and went about the setting of the table.

As he watched her, Billy felt the coming of that queer tightening of his heart that had been assailing him in these meetings with her, but it was only when she had taken her place and smiled across at him that his memories of that year when she had been wont to greet him every evening grew too heavy for solitary bearing.

"Did you ever happen to think that I was an awful fool?" he asked her.

"No," she said soberly. "I've been too busy being a fool myself."

"I wonder," he went on, "if you care for me at all anymore?"

She stared at him consideringly in the candle light. "I wonder," she countered, "why you want to know?"

"You could make it easier for me," he parried.

"I'm no good at riddles, Billy."

"This is no riddle." He braced himself for the plunge. "Didn't you ever think that sometimes a man might not know what he felt? Haven't you ever thought I really might have loved you, Laura, all the time that I didn't know it?"

"No," she said. "You lot no loophole to crawl through." The gleam from the candles showed her eyes strangely amber.

"You have forgotten all that you told me that night. I have forgotten not one word."

"I haven't forgotten," he said resolutely. "I've wished often enough that I could."

He groped for a new beginning. "The trouble was—" he tried to light a cigaret with a deliberation that failed. "I didn't know what love is. I thought it was wanting a girl all the time, and because I didn't want to be with you every minute, I thought I didn't love you. Perhaps I didn't, but I think I did, although it was in a different way. I don't know but what it was a better way. Laura."

"I was never then," she said, with a little catch in her voice.

"No," he said, "I don't believe you were."

"O," she began, "you don't know all I've done when I've been lonely, and reckless, and desperate. I've—"

"I know," he stopped her, "and all you've ever done has been my fault."

The acute contrition in his voice went deeper than his words, for the girl looked over the table, watching him intently.

"So that's why you want me to marry you again?" she demanded.

His eyes answered her, for she saw into anger as she stared at him.

"I won't have you sorry for me, I tell you," she cried. "It was bad enough to have you marry me because you thought I'd pull you out of the way you didn't want to go. It's worse to have you want to marry me again so that you can pull me out. Well, I won't. I'll marry Bergen, and I'll go on drinking, and gambling, and playing the races till I die. I hate it, and I hate it, and I hate myself, and Bergen, and all of them, but I won't have your pity. I'd have gone through hell with you, Billy, if you'd loved me, but I won't take less than love from you, no matter what I take from other men. So it's good-by again."

She rose from her seat over her shoulders and standing at the doorway in a high blouse of fury. "When you know how love means," she told him, "when you know that nothing in the world, poverty or riches, failure or luck, good or bad, matters when you have the one you care for, then you'll know how I've cared for you. When you know that, you can come and find me. I may be down in the hell my love for you has sent me to," her laughter rang out. "But, wherever I am, I'll be waiting for you."

She whirled open the door, letting the wind blow gustily over the table. A whiff of her perfume floated with it to the man's nostrils as she stood for a moment on the threshold of the night. She banged the door behind her as she went out, but her going did not leave Billy Raymer cold.

In Love Murder Plot

Mrs. Marion Risteen, who, with her "star boarder" George Plummer, is held at Beverly, Mass., for the murder of Fred Risteen, her husband. Risteen's body was found in a pond. He had been murdered, an automobile motor tied to the body to weight it down. The picture shows Mrs. Risteen being taken by police to identify the remains. She is said by police to have broken down, admitting complicity in murder and charging Plummer.

Where Else But in New York

Ruth Hall, 5, is the youngest permanent wave subject on record. And doesn't this seem typical of New York—a child of five so concerned with such things?

New Use for Old Tires

In St. Petersburg, Fla., they have invented a new sport to employ old auto tires. Ten pins are set up on a sidewalk or any smooth surface. The game is played the same as bowling, except that only one roll is allowed a frame.

From Broadway to Schoolroom

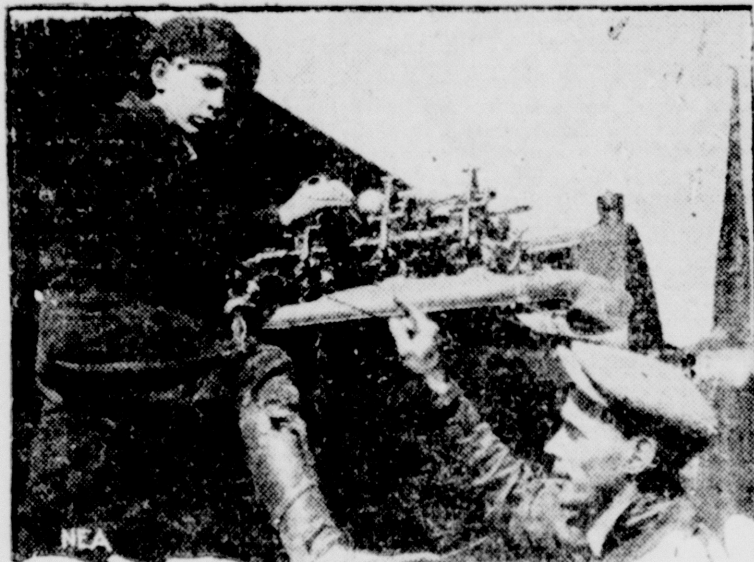

Hazel Verger, 18-year-old New Orleans dancer, made good on Broadway. For two years she danced with Ziegfeld's Follies. But now she has turned her back on the bright lights and gone back home. She is going to enter college. Here she is as the Follies girl and as the co-ed.

She Was Blind's "Angel"

Mrs. Lewis B. Woodruff, playwright and author, killed in a fall from a second story window of her New York home, was known as an "angel" to the blind. Royalties from one of her books went toward the establishment of the "Lighthouse for the Blind." Artists considered her one of the world's most beautiful women.

Only 12, But He's a Pilot

Farnum Parker, 12, of Anderson, Ind., was the youngest active pilot registered at the international air races in Dayton, O. He has been flying a year now. The youngster expects to obtain his license in a few months. His father, Fred Parker, shown here with him, was one of Orville Wright's first pupils more than 29 years ago.

When Horse Got in Trains Way

This picture shows what happened near Sweetwater, Texas, when a horse leaped out on the tracks in front of the Sunshine Special, crack passenger train of the Missouri Pacific and Texas & Pacific lines. Engineer and fireman were killed. The train at the time was traveling at a high rate of speed, trying to make up lost time.

Bringing in the Wounded

Here the Chienyang forces in China's civil war are seen bringing their wounded into headquarters. From Luho, it was a painful trip of 25 miles of bouncing on trucks or in the back seats of commandeered touring cars. On arrival at headquarters, the Chinese Red Cross took care of them. The latter organization has not, however, been close to the firing line.

They Paddled to School

These three University of Iowa co-eds came back to school this year in a canoe. They paddled nearly 200 miles, camping at night. From the front to the back of the boat they are: Gladys Brooker, Omaha; Josephine Buie, Boone, Ia., and Cecelia Klock, also of Boone.

American Type Captures Paris

It once was the style for Parisian stage queens to capture American audiences, but now the compliment is being returned and beautiful American girls are the toast of France. One of the most recent conquests is that of Estelle Gamble, beautiful young co-ed.

minutely he reached back to his hip pocket. Reassured, he opened the door of the room.

Under the light of the chandelier Laura and Bergen stood, facing each other. At the sound of his entrance they both turned. Laura in fright, Bergen in anger.

"What do you want?" Bergen snarled at him. "Don't you know enough to telephone before you come up?"

"I want to talk to my wife," Raymer said steadily.

"She's not your wife any more," Bergen snapped, "and she's going to be mine."

"Even if I believed that you meant that," Raymer told him, "I see that she didn't marry you."

"What right have you to dictate to her—or me?"

"I'm going to save her," Billy Raymer said. He pushed his checkered nap from his forehead, and his hand went again to his pocket. "I took her out of a good home, and away from good people. It's my fault that she came to know you or any one like you. It'd be my fault if she went to hell with the gang of you, so it's up to me to stop her."

"You're drunk," said Bergen.

"No, he isn't," Laura said. She was staring at him with startled eyes. "Let me talk to him, Dan."

"There's no use in talking now," Raymer said. "We went beyond talking down there in the old house."

"Look here," Bergen put in, "you can't come around here, raising a row. If you don't get out—"

"He moved toward the telephone."

"Stay where you are," Raymer barked. He kept him under cover as he turned to Laura. "Will you marry me now?" he flung at her.

"She flung back her head, and looked him squarely in the eyes."

"Then, by God, you'll die with me," he snarled, and flashed out the revolver on which his hand had rested.

She never turned from her steady watching, but into her eyes rose not the fear he had expected, but a triumph which flared like a fire out of embers.

"Then it wasn't because—" she began, but Bergen's swift pounce upon Billy halted her words. "Don't hurt him!" she shrieked as the stouter man gripped him from behind, and the two of them began to struggle over the narrow room.

With Bergen's arms pinioning him, Raymer struggled frantically, twisting and turning in the other's grasp. Against the bed, against the table, against the wall they swung.

"Don't hurt him," she kept saying, as they milled in locked embrace, Bergen relentlessly pressing the slighter man until at last he flung him, defenseless, on the floor. Then, "Give me that gun," she told him. He handed it to her with no question.

"Now get out," she said.

He looked at her unbelievably for a moment, then pursed his dry lips into a whistle. "Do you mean," he asked her, "that you're quitting me cold?"

"I mean just that," she said.

He looked down from her to Raymer, spent and helpless on the floor, and a bitter smile ran his twisted way over his broad face.

"Raymer," he said, "I thought you were a damned fool, but I've decided I'm a damner one. I thought I knew a lot about women, but I guess the most that any man knows is that he doesn't know anything at all. I've surely had the wrong hunch on this game. I thought she wouldn't see you for dust. But you can never tell. Anyhow, you were wrong on one thing. You didn't believe I wanted to marry her. Well, I do. There's never been anything I've wanted quite so much. I know when I'm licked, though." He turned to the door. "Good-by, Laura. Happy days!"

"Happy days, Dan," she said. "Just remember that I know you were playing the same straight."

The door closed after him, and she bent over Raymer. "Are you hurt?" she asked him.

"Not bad," he told her, struggling to rise. "Can I get anything for you?" she persisted.

"No," he told her. "I guess I made an awful mess of things."

"You did," she said.

In spite of the pain which racked him, he managed to get to his feet.

"He's right," he said. "I'm a damned fool, and a damned knave, too. What right have I to stand between you and anything you want? I—I went mad tonight. I'm sorry, Laura." He held out his hand to her. "Will you forgive me?"

"For this?" She twisted her gleaming rings.

"For everything. I've been all wrong all the way through. I didn't see that marriage was fifty-fifty. I just took what you gave, and I didn't give anything at all. You had your hell when you found out. Mine's just beginning. It all squares up in the big books." He moved toward the door. "You said out there in the house, 'he went on, 'that you wouldn't marry me because I was only sorry for you. Well, I'm not asking you to marry me now, because the shoe's on the other foot. You're sorry for me, and I don't deserve even that. I'm nothing but a down at the heels gambler, and even if I win tomorrow I'll never be anything else. You're well, it's in you to play for higher stakes. Good-by, Laura."

"But I—"

"Good-by, Billy."

He limped down the hallway and summoned the elevator. In the lobby he passed Bergen, smoking savagely, and sought to stride past the other man without notice his stiffness. If Bergen saw him, he gave no sign. A group of men over near the desk halted him, but he ignored them, and went out into the cool night. On the sidewalk outside the Elsinore he stood, staring out upon the twinkling lights of Baltimore.

Even if I win tomorrow," he muttered, and with a long sigh for what could not be crossed toward the street or his lodgings. The bugle was sounding the Calvert wharves he saw Laura the next afternoon. She was in the paddock, scanning the crowd, and he had the hope that she sought him, but the memory of his outburst humiliated him, and he turned away, going to the gate to watch the approach of the horses to the barrier. It was just as well, he thought, that they didn't meet again.

"I ought to be lucky at the ponies now," he told himself, and wriggled through the gate to see the entries for the famous race. Pentecost came first, stepping high with a sure pride that brought to Raymer's heart a little glow of comfort. In the heat of it he tried to convince himself that, after all, this was a man's great game. A line, heard long before and stored in some corner of his camera plate mind, printed itself out as he looked on the string of thoroughbreds coming forth to trial.

Four things greater than all things are. Women, and horses, and power, and war.

he remembered. Well, for power men had gone to war, but the horses had run at Autuel within sound of thundering guns. Twice he had lost Laura, but women were women, and Pentecost would win the Calvert, helping him to forgetfulness of that flame of scorn with which one woman had seared him last night. The thought of that look stole his resolve, and he flung himself into concentration of watchfulness of sorrel and chestnut, and black, gazing on them with the partisanship of the early wagerer.

The Belvoir three-year-old, dancing outward, lifted the cry of "Belmont" from the crowd in the stand and the crowd near the gate, but Billy Raymer's mouth twisted at the best of the cheer while he visioned the moment when the orange and blue of the Belvoir must fall behind the green and white of Pentecost's rider. A frown ran between his eyes as the red and black of Attila went between the favorite and the horse of his choice, but fell away as the barrier lifted and the bunch sped down the coire ribbon of the track, with Pentecost in the lead.

An old voice, quavering behind him at the drop of the barrier, persisted in his ears as he leaned out, intent on the twinkling of Pentecost's heels. An old hand clutched his sleeve, and he turned to find Pop Graham beside him.

"I've bet on him, Billy," the old man croaked. "Put up two dollars in the Mutual."

He danced merrily at Raymer's elbow as Pentecost flashed past the first white post, and cheered with joy as the green and white held the lead at the half-mile, but Billy Raymer caught his breath sharply as the red and black edged to the fence, showing Pentecost off from vantage. Then, in a flash, the orange and blue of the Belvoir was in front, streaking the olive drab of the course with its flame as Belmont, leaving the huddled group, shot forward.

"Come on, Pentecost," pleaded Pop Graham, grasping at Raymer's coat. "Attahoy, Attahoy!" a ferret-faced tout kept shouting. But "Belmont!" roared the crowd as the Belvoir colors came closer and closer and "Belmont!" clove the clouds as orange and blue crossed the tape.

"I've lost it, Billy," Pop's voice sobbing, regret, came over a vast distance to Raymer's ears.

"Well, so have I, Pop," he said.

"We're out of luck," the old man sniveled. "Out of luck," said Billy Raymer.

He tried to smile, but the smile would not come at his bidding. Try as he might, he could not summon the blithe courage that had carried him through so many disasters. A strange sense that life was playing him false cast its burden upon him as he looked over the track with misty eyes. He had lost time to smile, but the smile would not come at his bidding. Try as he might, he could not summon the blithe courage that had carried him through so many disasters. Street Safety and Accident Prevention Campaign Sweeps Country More Than Ever

JUDGES CLAMP DOWN TIGHTER

Imprisonment Sentences in Some Cities

A general campaign for street safety and accident prevention has been sweeping the country in greater proportions than has ever been undertaken.

The American Automobile association, the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, the National Safety Council, city, state and government authorities have combined in one serious undertaking to make traffic safer for both drivers and pedestrians.

A survey of cities throughout the country points to various means by which this object is sought.

City judges have been clamping down tighter than ever on traffic lawbreakers, preventative measures have been attempted, and all sorts of punishments meted out to violators. There is still, however, a difference of opinion as to the best methods of solving the situation.

In Cleveland, Memphis and many other large cities, guilty drivers have met with severe fines or imprisonment in attempts to lower the accident and death rates on streets. Yet some automobile officials believe that this is only part of a general remedy that should be applied to traffic lessers.

Suggested Remedies

The National Automobile Chamber of Commerce urges five ways to improve traffic conditions. They are:

1. Hold speed down to a maximum of 20 miles an hour in all residential sections, except where there are special boulevard provisions.
2. Jail, revocation of licenses and taking away the car of those guilty will help make streets safe.
3. Safety education in schools.
4. Gathering statistics for future means of control.

5. Relief of congestion by thorough routing of tourists and others who do not care to stop in town.

Besides activities of officials, there is the motorist himself to whom the American Automobile Association has been making a special appeal for safety.

"Safety Depends on the Driver," says Fred H. Caley, president of the Ohio State Automobile association. "If conditions are to be improved, drivers must recognize the personal element as still being of the utmost importance." The average driver falls into the habit of expecting too much from the protective equipment of his car.

In its endeavor to create safer traffic conditions, the A. A. U. has opposed the enactment of radical accident prevention measures until they have been investigated and found practicable. Temporary flurries of police and judges, freak measures and other such practices are discouraged.

REMEDY SUGGESTED FOR SLIPPING CLUTCH

On some cars which have been in service for years, trouble is sometimes experienced with the continual slipping of the clutch. This is generally due to oil leaking into the clutch housing from the crankcase through the end bearing. The proper way to prevent this leakage is to properly fit the bearings. However, on an old car, the owner may feel that the expense involved will not be justified. In such cases, the following simple arrangement often gives good results:

A heavy felt or leather washer is placed over the breather pipe cap, so that when it is screwed down tightly, it will be airtight. A piece of small copper tubing is then attached between the breather pipe and the intake manifold. In this manner, whenever the engine is running, a partial vacuum is created in the crankcase, which is of sufficient strength to keep the oil from running out of the bearing.

STRAIGHT EIGHT HERE

The Straight Eight, long recognized for its even torque and lack of vibration on the race track, has arrived, although several makers have been building this type for a year or more. With the development of this type by engine builders, the car maker who prefers to have the specialist build his units and the announcement recently by several prominent makers that models equipped with a straight engine are now available, eliminates all doubt as to whether the straight eight has arrived. The indications are that the coming year will find the eight cylinder car exceedingly popular.

CLEAN RUNNING BOARDS

After cleaning all mud from the auto running boards with soap and water wipe them with kerosene to remove the grease and oil spots. Kerosene is also excellent for cleaning floor boards.

HAND BRAKES POOR

Seventy per cent of some 200 emergency brakes tested at random recently by the bureau of standards in Washington were classed as poor, while only 5.3 per cent really made a creditable showing.

BLIND MAY DRIVE

There is no clause in any of the Louisville or Kentucky codes prohibiting a blind man from driving an auto. But the police traffic head, who brought up this point, has decided to arrest such drivers on the charge of "breach of the peace."

City Judge Clifford Davis of Memphis, Tenn., has made city driving safer than ever before by fining more than 1,000 speeders a flat sum of $50 each. Reduction of the city's death toll by 13, from last year's, is attributed to his activities.

BUICK PRAISES AUTO'S GROWTH

Surpasses Anything Yet, Says High Officials

"Most people of today recognize the value of the automobile, and the important part it plays in our daily affairs," says E. T. Strong, General Sales Manager of the Buick Motor company, "but very seldom do we give thought to the magnitude and wonderfully rapid growth of this comparatively new industry."

"When one compares the growth of other means of communication and transportation to the growth of the automobile it is quickly realized that the growth of the automobile industry surpasses anything in history."

"Take the telegraph, for instance. It was eighty years ago that Congress appropriated $30,000 with which to build a telegraph line from Washington to Baltimore, and in all that eighty years only 237,644 miles of telegraph lines have been constructed."

"During the past ninety years, or since 1861 when railroads began to be developed, only 298,661 miles of railroad track have been built."

"While automobiles have only been in the course of development on a commercial basis for slightly over twenty years, there are today more than 430,000 miles of surfaced or improved roads. Now consider the increase in value of the property bordering on these improved roads, which is almost beyond the imagination, and you will get a slight idea of the value of automobiles and the automobile industry."

"In all probability there has been no other invention that has increased the wealth of the country to as great an extent as the invention and development of the automobile."

"Just picture the world trying to get along without automobiles and gasoline-motor propelled vehicles today. It just can't be conceived, let alone be possible."

"Granting that the automobile has increased the general efficiency and money value of the professional and business world, and greatly increased the value of property by being the direct means of improved highways, let us see just what has happened to the wealth of the country during the period of its development."

"Bank clearings ten years ago were about 173 billion dollars a year. The bank clearings now are 253 billion dollars a year—an increase of over 200 per cent."

"Savings deposits have shown a considerable increase during the twenty year development of the automobile. The increase has been 26 per cent since 1920."

"The per capita wealth of the country today is $13.00, a decided increase over what it was twenty years ago, all of which goes to show that this infant automobile industry has been a blessing to mankind, greater than we have any idea of until we stop in the midst of our rapid development and analyze just what has taken place during the past twelve years. The future of the automobile industry, you say. Well, who can predict what it will be with such a tremendous start. History proves that the world's development continues regardless of the efforts of any who might attempt to hold it back."

EXACT TESTING OF CHEVROLET

Measurements Held Down To Ten Thousandths

Only those who have actually gone through a motor car factory realize that practically one-half the force work on the building of the motors. For after all, the regard in which a car is held by the public has really been built upon how well the motor functions under all conditions.

And how well the motor is built depends on how fine are the measurements or limits used in the building of the motor and its parts.

In the building of all the Chevrolet motors at the gigantic factory at Flint, Michigan, limits are held as low as two ten thousandths of an inch. Practically every part manufactured receives 100 per cent inspection before it is fed into the assembly line.

Then such close assemblies are made as: Piston pin fits into piston to a limit of .0002 of an inch; cam shaft, connecting rod and crankshaft bearing are held to .001 of an inch in addition to holding to these in infinitesimal limits, there are inspections for practically every assembly operation, such as the crank shaft and cam shaft bearing fits and alignments; the piston pin and piston fit; the clutch alignments and the valve setting.

But the inspection does not stop here. As soon as the motor has been assembled, it is given the electric test, that is, run by an electric motor at 1,200 revolutions per minute for from two to three hours. This test is to take the stiffness out of the new motor, work in the bearings and piston rings to insure smooth operation.

After this has been completed, the motor is disassembled, washed and again thoroughly inspected. Then the motor is re-assembled.

Third Brush Regulation

To change the charging rate with third brush regulation is a simple matter, though it should not be attempted without giving it some thought, and determining whether the generator in question is capable of an increased output. This refers only to increasing the rate, as in decreasing it no harm can be done to the generator, but the battery may be under charged and for this reason the rate must not be reduced too low. To increase the charging rate, move the third brush in the direction of rotation of the armature and to decrease the charging rate, move the brush in the opposite direction. After this is done, the brush must be refitted to the commutator. Cars having this system of generator regulation which are equipped without the storage battery in the charging circuit should have some provision to protect the generator windings and commutator. The most practical thing to do under such conditions is to open the shunt field circuit of the generator and thus prevent the voltage from building up. Some manufacturers recommend short-circuiting the generator by bridging a connector from the negative to the positive terminal. With the battery removed, care should be taken that the terminals at the ends of the cables, which were disconnected from the battery, do not touch each other or any other metal part of the chassis.—Automobile Digest.

HALF-SECOND DELAY

The U. S. bureau of standards finds there is an average delay of half a second between the signal to a driver to stop and application of the brakes. During this time a car with a speed of 30 miles an hour would travel 22 feet.

SIPHONING GASOLINE OUT OF TANK EASY

To draw gasoline from a tank with out a petcock, siphoning is perhaps the quickest and easiest method. But unless one relishes the taste of gasoline, drawing on the end of a tube with the mouth is not a satisfactory method. A tasteless way of starting the flow of gas is as follows: Use a piece of rubber hose that is fairly stiff so that it does not bend too easily. Insert it straight down into the tank, closing the opposite end with the thumb. Then raise the hose quickly, remove the thumb and quickly push the hose into the tank again immediately closing the tube again with the thumb. Repeating this process several times will gradually cause the level of the gas to rise higher in the tube. When the gas starts to flow from the end of the tube, quickly drop the end into a receptacle and the gasoline will continue to flow.

HOW TO DRY BODY AND CHASSIS OF CAR

For drying off the water from the body of the car or chassis use a chamamois skin free from lint and absolutely clean. Wring the chamamois out after rinsing in clear water, or if dirty wash it in a solution of soft water and Castile soap. Begin at the first part of the car washed, proceed to pass the chamamois over the surface with just sufficient pressure to take the water, with the exception of a mist, which will quickly evaporate.

To attempt to wipe the car perfectly dry in all parts will result in injury to the luster of the finish. An erosive effect on the surface can be produced under the pressure of the chamamois and this effect must be avoided at all times. No car should be left unwashed for more than 24 hours.

DRIVING ON WET STREET

When driving on wet streets the clutch should never be released except at the last moment to prevent the engine from stalling. Always apply brakes gradually.—Automobile Digest.

CHATTERING BANDS

Many remedies for chattering have been suggested. Some call for the use of heavy-bodied oils, forgetting that Ford construction demands a light-bodied oil for correct lubrication.

On account of the troubles which have been experienced, the Ford Motor company has developed a new band lining, specially treated to main lubrication and thereby prevent chattering. This is now standard equipment in Ford cars and on sale by Ford dealers.

When the lining is not available, the following mechanical method of eliminating chatter with lining of old material will be effective: In fitting new linings, drill or punch a series of 5-16 inch holes through the lining (not the metal bands) along its center line, one between each pair of rivets.

CENTER ROAD GUIDES

If situated traffic and street guides, placed in the center of intersections, are replacing the old lamp post and its signs. The guides act also as dummy traffic cops.

Upon an import duty of 45 per cent, on American autos, France adds 10 per cent luxury tax and 1.3 turnover tax.

FORD BUSINESS ABROAD BOOMS

Nine Months Totals Almost Equal All of 1923

The improving economic situation abroad is reflected in the September reports from the managers of the Ford Motor Company's foreign branches and associated companies. These show that this is the biggest year the Ford Motor company has ever enjoyed in the foreign field.

Although the reports cover only nine months of the year the sales of Ford units—cars, trucks and tractors are already close to the record for the entire year of 1923. From January 1 to October 1, 1924, the sale of Ford products overseas amounted to 138,261 cars and trucks and 10,303 Fordson tractors. These figures do not include the production of the Ford Motor Car company of Canada, Ltd., which supplies Ford products to all parts of the British Empire except the British Isles.

If truck sales are any barometer of economic conditions then foreign commerce is coming back rapidly for the January to October sales have run over 13,000 ahead of the entire year's record of 1923.

Argentina leads the export field in the purchase of Ford cars, having taken nearly 16,000 since the first of the year—a considerable gain over the first three-quarters of last year.

While the revolution in the state of Sao Paulo, Brazil, slowed up business all over the country the recovery has been very swift and 1741 Ford units were sold there during September. The Ford plant at Sao Paulo was, of course, shut down during the revolution.

The tractor market continues to improve all over the world and there are few places where substantial gains have not been made. In the Scandinavian countries Fordson tractor sales are over three times as high as for the whole of last year and in Belgium, Holland and the Near East the record is within a very small margin of being as good. The market in Germany also is improving and a recent order for 500 Fordsons from that country has just been filled, making a total of 1,500 so far this year.

The increasing demand for Ford products in Europe has made it necessary to open a new Ford plant at Stockholm, although a year ago all this territory was handled by the Copenhagen plant. A similar situation prevailed in Holland where Ford business increased so rapidly that the Antwerp plant could no longer take care of it and Rotterdam got a new Ford factory of its own. Also, a branch has recently been established at Santiago, Chile.

CLEAN TOP FIRST

Before starting the washing of the car the top should receive attention. This can be sponged off with clean tepid water, and when coated with dust or mud, this water should contain enough Castile soap to provide sufficient alkali to cleanse. Follow this cleaning by drying with a chamamois skin.

BA' LOON IN P.A.R.'S

More than 5000 taxicabs in Paris have been equipped with balloons. Some 3200 of them, owned by the largest company, were changed recently from twin-cylinder to four-cylinder cars, and had front wheel h.c.s. attached.

FLAT RATE SERVICE

A New Plan Appealing to Thrifty Chevrolet Owners is Announced by PHILIP INMAN & CO.

Flat Rate Service—the kind of service you have been waiting for, is now at your call. We have adopted this new method of handling charges for repair work because it enables every Chevrolet owner to get an intelligent estimate of the cost of repairs before the work is started.

Our repair shop is guided by a schedule of repair operations, each covering a specific repair job with the exact average time indicated plainly. The standard price list of Chevrolet Parts gives the exact cost of replacement parts needed. These are the facts that take the uncertainty out of service work.

The Flat Rate System makes for better work at lower prices, because repair men spend their time doing only what you have ordered. That's what we charge for, and you know in advance what it will cost.

Our shop is equipped with special Chevrolet tools. No repair job is too large or too small to be handled efficiently and at minimum cost to you.

Mrs. C. Raup Leads Program At Federation

The all day session of the Federated Missionary Society on Thursday proved a delightful success with more than one hundred members and visitors in attendance. The session was held at St. George's Episcopal church with members of St. George's Guild as hostesses.

The guild was awarded the banner for the largest percentage of members in attendance.

The program for the all day meet was prepared by the women of the Congregational church with Mrs. C. R. Raup in charge. The program opened with the devotional service by Mrs. C. W. Rodgers, and following the business session at which Mrs. W. J. Steck presided, Mrs. N. T. Fuller gave an interesting talk on the history of the title.

The male quartet comprised of Messrs. Culpepper, Baxter, Palmer and Seubold, entertained with a pleasing number, after which Mrs. O. T. Hotchkiss spoke of the moral and religious value of the title. The New Testament idea of the title was clearly outlined by Rev. John Ridout, rector of St. George's Episcopal church.

At noon a delectable luncheon was served by the Guild women, and the afternoon session opened with the devotional service by Mrs. E. G. Sutherland. Mrs. W. P. Irwin told of the origin and history of the Sabbath, and Mrs. J. M. Reagan spoke of the modern idea of the Sabbath. Mrs. R. L. Drake and Mrs. Fred Dodge sang a lovely duet and Mrs. Ne Cochran gave a delightful reading.

The program was concluded with Rev. C. W. Rodgers' talk on "The Future of Sabbath Observance: A Prophecy."

The next quarterly meeting of the Federation will be held on January 18 at the Presbyterian church with the Episcopal Guild in charge of the program, which will be sponsored by Mrs. G. H. Eubank.

Mrs. Lohmann Hostess To Culture Club

Members of the Culture club were graciously entertained Wednesday afternoon by Mrs. Ed Lohmann at her home, 2715 Procter street.

Mrs. H. G. Johnson sponsored the afternoon's program, the second of a series on "Psychology—Social and Applied," dealing with men's native tendencies. Mrs. P. T. Williams told of the tendencies to act, and Mrs. O. W. Keith spoke of instinct and emotion. "Other Phases of Native Equipment in Man" was the subject of Miss Constance Johnson's talk. A general discussion under the direction of the leader followed.

A short business session preceded the program, during which time Mrs. R. L. Rutan and Mrs. H. K. Deason were welcomed into the membership of the club. At the conclusion of the program Mrs. Lohmann served a lovely salad course.

Those in attendance were Mrs. J. H. Arnold, Mrs. Arthur Beard, Mrs. H. H. Brown, Mrs. E. L. Caldwell, Mrs. M. D. Carter, Mrs. L. B. Fisher, Mrs. E. M. Friedl, Mrs. A. A. Gantner, Mrs. H. G. Johnson, Miss Constance Johnson, Mrs. O. W. Keith, Mrs. F. L. Tanton, Mrs. P. T. Williams, Mrs. C. C. Yates and Mrs. Ed Lohmann.

FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY WILL MEET

The Foreign Missionary society will meet Thursday afternoon with Mrs. F. A. Bushong at her home, 2630 Fifth street, at 2:30 o'clock.

Mrs. C. V. Palmer will conduct the devotional service on "The Stewardship of Giving," and Mrs. C. W. Rodgers will have charge of the lesson study on "Missionary Year and Why—Threeworld Stewardship." The following numbers will be given in conjunction with the program:

Story: "Titan Hen Egg"—Mrs. E. D. Streeter.

Story: "Miss Fragrant's Money"—Mrs. George E. Carter.

Story: "Which Is Yours?"—Mrs. F. A. Bushong.

PHILTHEA COAST MEETS SATURDAY

The Philthea Sunday school class of the First Baptist church met in a short business session Saturday afternoon with their teacher, A. S. E. H. McGuire at her home, 625 Charleston avenue, following which a delightful social hour was enjoyed. Refreshments of sandwiches and hot chocolate were served.

Enjoying the afternoon were Misses Merle Nantz, Violet Fronberger, Lois Lavelle, Hazel Wiltz, Dorot Cryar, Dorothy Mae Jones, Margaret Jackson, Cecelia McClure, Lilla Blanche Gunn, Pho Sigma James, Lorene Covington, Nita McGee and Odie Spiney, and Mrs. E. H. McGuire.

ALFAR SOCIETY ENTERTAINED

Members of the Alfar Society of St. Mary's Catholic church were pleasantly entertained Thursday afternoon by Mrs. V. R. Suttie, Mrs. Sam Simon and Mrs. G. L. Ross at the K. C. hall. The hall was decorated in the Halloween colors of orange and black and following the business session the hostesses offered a dainty refreshment course.

Those present were Mrs. A. J. Krohn, Mrs. John T. Ferguson, Mrs. J. Baumert, Mrs. M. Garcia, Mrs. N. P. Mire, Mrs. A. D. Aroldin, Mrs. A. J. Guillott, Mrs. W. J. Deady, Mrs. P. J. Doyle, Mrs. Theo Gentil, Mrs. J. D. Cappel, Mrs. W. A. Kavanaugh, Mrs. A. H. Barras, Mrs. John J. Worm, Mrs. Barney Smith, Mrs. R. T. Hebert, Mrs. James McLaughlin, Mrs. Charles George, Mrs. E. T. Craft, Mrs. Roy Huston, Mrs. A. W. Raye, Mrs. J. Letcher, Mrs. V. R. Suttie, Mrs. Sam Simon and Mrs. G. L. Ross.

SPECIAL MUSIC AT BAPTIST CHURCH

At the First Baptist church today the choir will render the following musical numbers under the direction of Mrs. E. H. McGuire:

MORNING

Anthem: "When I Survey" (Mason)—Choir, with Mrs. O. A. Groves as soloist.

Offertory: Violin solo, "Adoration" (Borowski)—Miss Elizabeth Young.

Postlude: Organ.

ST. GEORGE'S AUXILIARY WITH MRS. G. H. EUBANK

St. George's Episcopal Auxiliary will meet on Thursday afternoon with Mrs. G. H. Eubank at her home, 2601 Lake Shore drive, at 2:30 o'clock. All members of the Auxiliary are urged to attend this session.

MR. AND MRS. MURR GO TO HOUSTON

Mr. and Mrs. George B. Murr and children, accompanied by Mike Nochiass and N. Cory, left yesterday for Houston to spend a week with Mr. and Mrs. Murr's daughter, Mrs. George Jamail, and other relatives.

REBEKAHS TO BEAUMONT

The Rebekahs will hold no meeting Friday evening but will go to Beaumont to attend an entertainment of the Beaumont organization. At last Friday evening's session the members planned a tackety party to be given next month.

Mrs. Biggens Entertains At Lovely Bridge

Charmingly appointed in a motif favoring the Halloween season was the attractive bridge party Friday afternoon, which had as hostess Mrs. J. E. Biggens at her home, 3021 Procter street, the personnel of guests being drawn from the Friday Bridge club.

Beautiful cosmos in graceful placements about the rooms gave floral beauty to the home, their glowing tint being reflected in the Halloween emblems which formed the bridge table accessories.

Three tables of players enjoyed the games in which Mrs. A. N. Peckham was awarded the club prize for high score and Mrs. Herbert Henderson received the guest prize. A lovely salad course was served on trays at the close of the games.

The guest list included Mrs. John son of Philadelphia, Mrs. F. Dengler of Port Neches, Mrs. Herbert Henderson, Mrs. A. N. Peckham, Mrs. Frank Imhoff, Mrs. Howard Smith, Mrs. W. N. McReynolds, Mrs. Sam Latimer, Mrs. Dean Dorchester, Mrs. W. H. Elliott, Mrs. Joe Park, and Mrs. George Imhoff.

Mrs. Dean Dorchester will be the club's hostess next week at her home, 1953 Lake Shore drive.

Reading Club To Study "The Common Lot"

Robert Herrick's novel, "The Common Lot," will form the basis of an interesting program Friday afternoon at the Reading club session at the Department club. The meeting is scheduled for 3 o'clock.

Preceding the program a short business session will be held, Mrs. H. P. Foote will have charge of the program, which will be as follows:

Paper: Robert Herrick's Contributions to American Literature—Mrs. H. K. Goodwin.

Paper: "The Common Lot" as a social criticism of American life—Mrs. S. C. Dunlap.

Discussion under direction of the leader:

(a) Types of American Women. Seen in the Novel.

(b) Herrick's portrayal of professional life.

(c) Herrick's ideal of marriage.

(d) Character of Everett Wheeler.

NOTE ENDORSEMENTS

This is another of a series of advertisements by Employees of the First National Bank. Others will follow. Watch for them.

NOTE ENDORSEMENTS

Some men never provide for an emergency and consequently are forced to apply for a loan when one arises. As they have not invested a portion of their earnings in bankable securities they impose on their thrifty friends or the merchant with whom they trade by asking them to endorse their note.

They do not realize that they are asking one of the greatest favors they could ask as the man who endorses for them must pledge his own credit that he might need himself before the note was paid.

The merchant is probably solicited more than others and many of them afraid to offend a man who buys a few dollars worth of merchandise from them, will go ahead and sign the note. This should never be done as each note signed increases his own liabilities and lowers his credit.

Some men sign a note and then proceed to forget all about it until the bank notifies them that the note is past due and the maker has not paid it on the due date. If you do endorse a note keep a notation of the due date and be prepared to pay it on the due date if the maker does not. Don't forget that the bank has lent the money on your credit and it is your credit that will suffer if allowed to go past due.

Mother of Port Arthur Woman Dead

Word was received here Saturday that Mrs. C. E. Frenette, mother of Mrs. J. H. Cope, 442 Nashville avenue, had died at Port Huron, Mich., following an attack of pneumonia.

Mrs. Cope left for Port Huron Wednesday upon receipt of a communication stating that her mother was critically ill, and was at the latter's bedside when death came.

CHILD HEALTH CLINIC ON MONDAY AFTERNOON

The child health clinic will be held Monday afternoon at the Red Cross hut, Fifth and Dallas avenue. All mothers of Port Arthur and surrounding communities are invited to attend the clinic by Mrs. Mattie Jackson, public health nurse, who will assist local physicians in examining the children.

Indignant at the duplicity of a "trusty" who escaped, convicts in the Maine state prison have offered a reward of $100 from their own funds for his capture.

Unique Industry Is Found On Houston

An industry that Port Arthur didn't know it had comes to light in the pepper sauce factory operated here for the past three years by L. Carabine, at 102 Houston avenue.

Production from Carabine's industry runs as high as 1,200 bottles a month, he said. The peppers, red and green, all hot, are imported from Louisiana, and because of the long drought in that state, Carabine is complaining of difficulty in getting enough peppers to fill orders for the sauce.

In addition to operating his factory, Carabine also works on the docks and ships as a longshoreman. He moved to Port Arthur with his family three years ago from Avery Island, La., where he worked in an oyster factory.

CONGREGATIONAL MEN'S CLUB TO ENTERTAIN

The Men's club of the Congregational church will entertain at dinner Monday evening at 6:30 o'clock on the mezzanine floor of Fuller's cafe. Speakers from New York and Chicago will be in attendance at the dinner and will make addresses to the club. Thirty members of the Men's club are expected to attend the dinner.
